4.7 million sq ft Royal Albert Docks gets planning permission

Chinese developer ABP's Royal Albert Docks plans gained outline planning last night from Newham council.

The plans create a 4.7 million square feet complex of offices and supporting residential and retail units and public squares, located just above London City Airport.

The approval for the £1.5 billion 35-acre Royal Dock development comes on the back of planning permission granted for the 6.5 million sq ft Wood Wharf development at Canary Wharf by Tower Hamlets council on Tuesday (<http://www.propertymall.com/property-news/article/36119-Tower-Hamlets-grants-planning-permission-for-6.5-million-sq-ft-Wood-Wharf-development>).

Plans to build Britain's first 'floating village' at London's Royal Docks moved a step closer yesterday too after the Mayor of London, Boris Johnson, revealed that Carillion Igloo Genesis had won the competition to design and build it (<http://www.propertymall.com/property-news/article/36131-Mayor-picks-developer-to-build-Royal-Docks-floating-village>).

The three projects would totally transform vast sways of land in East London, with Royal Albert Dock planning on being transformed into 'London's third business district.'
