Wetland and Riparian Areas of the Intermountain West Mark C. McKinstry, Wayne A. Hubert, Stanley H. Anderson, 2010-01-01 Wetlands and riparian areas between the Rocky Mountains and the Sierra Nevada are incredibly diverse and valuable habitats More than 80 percent of the wildlife species in this intermountain region depend on these wetlands which account for less than 2 percent of the land area for their survival At the same time the wetlands also serve the water needs of ranchers and farmers recreationists vacation communities and cities It is no exaggeration to call water the liquid gold of the West and the burgeoning human demands on this scarce resource make it imperative to understand and properly manage the wetlands and riverine areas of the Intermountain West This book offers land managers biologists and research scientists a state of the art survey of the ecology and management practices of wetland and riparian areas in the Intermountain West Twelve articles examine such diverse issues as laws and regulations affecting these habitats the unique physiographic features of the region the importance of wetlands and riparian areas to fish wildlife and livestock the ecological function of these areas their value to humans and the methods to evaluate these habitats The authors also address the human impacts on the land from urban and suburban development mining grazing energy extraction recreation water diversions and timber harvesting and suggest ways to mitigate such impacts

Matter, R. William Mannan, 1988 The mining of sand and gravel deposits in the floodplains of rivers can disturb valuable riparian habitat in the arid Southwest Disturbed land can be reclaimed to provide fish and wildlife habitat if water is present The depth shoreline shape and slope area location and number of sand and gravel pits and the plant species that revegetate disturbed areas can be managed to influence subsequent colonization by animals Native species of plants generally are preferable to exotics when revegetating disturbed areas even if native species require special treatments to become established Monitoring of critical habitat features and plant and animal species is necessary to document the effectiveness of reclamation efforts and to ensure that habitat once established is not lost Ducks, Geese, and Swans of North America Guy A.
