Arms Control Management Or Reform:

Arms Control Lawrence Freedman, 2020-11-19 Originally published in 1986 although the pace of arms control negotiations has been stepped up there is still little sign of agreement In this paper the author examines the current negotiating effort with particular emphasis on its implications for European security He provides an up to date analysis of the superpower discussions on nuclear arms control including the impact of star wars and also of the talks at Vienna on conventional force reductions and at Stockholm on confidence building measures He notes a shift in emphasis from parity to transparency in Western proposals and questions whether this promises greater results than were achieved from earlier approaches He also warns of the risks of arms control arrangements obstructing possibilities for reforming the European security system

Arms Control At Sea J Richard Hill, 2024-04-01 Originally published in 1989 this book reviews the history of maritime control measures from before the First World War and provides a critical examination of both the objectives of maritime power and the concepts of disarmament peace zones parity verifiability and peaceful co existence It argues that the objectives of maritime power are not necessarily incompatible with international security and that strategic deterrence can contribute to improved security Limitation measures it is argued can in some cases be double edged endangering other security fields and having a destabilizing effect The book stresses the need for non absolute solutions in order to achieve a reasonable level of security and makes proposals for both structural and confidence building measures along those lines

Integrating SSR and SALW Programming Mark Sedra, Geoff Burt, 2016-05-05 Security sector reform SSR and small arms and lights weapons SALW reduction and control programmes have become staples of peacebuilding policy and practice in fragile failed and conflict affected states FFCAS There is wide agreement in the peacebuilding field that the two areas are intricately interconnected and mutually reinforcing However this consensus has rarely translated into integrated programming on the ground Drawing on a diverse set of case studies this paper presents a renewed argument for robust integration of SSR and SALW programming The failure to exploit innate synergies between the two areas in the field has not merely resulted in missed opportunities to leverage scarce resources and capacity but has caused significant programmatic setbacks that have harmed wider prospects for peace and stability With the SSR model itself in a period of conceptual transition the time is ripe for innovation A renewed emphasis on integrating SSR and SALW programming in FFCAS while not a wholly new idea represents a potential avenue for change that could deliver significant dividends in the field The paper offers some preliminary ideas on how to achieve this renewed integration in practice
