Agglomeration 77 K. V. S. Sastry, 1977 Properties of Cement Compacts Prepared by High-pressure Compaction Jeffrey R. Borman, 1986 The purpose of this investigation was to determine the combined effects of fly ash as a partial replacement for portland cement and the use of high pressure compaction in reducing the porosity and increasing the compressive strength of prepared miniature compacts According to current practice and theory for specialized uses portland cement concrete materials with strengths approaching 20 000 psi 140 MPa may be produced by reducing the amount of porosity present in the microstructure of the paste matrix material To accomplish this both high pressure compaction and increased formation of cementitious products form a pozzolanic reaction have provided excellent results However judging from an extensive literature survey the effect of combining the two has not been examined The three main parameters investigated included the initial compacted porosity level from high pressure compaction the percentage fly ash replacement of the cement and curing duration Additionally the effects of accelerated curing by oven drying was explored The study revealed that high pressure compaction followed by accelerated curing is an excellent means of producing a low porosity condition and thereby a greater strength in a cementitious material National Union Catalog , 1977 Includes entries for maps and atlases Books and Pamphlets, Including Serials and Contributions to Periodicals Library of Congress. Copyright Office, 1978 Agglomeration of Iron Ores Ram Pravesh Bhagat, 2019-07-11 This book focuses on agglomeration or the size enlargement process of iron ores This process sits at the interface of mineral processing and extractive metallurgy The book begins with a discussion of raw materials preparation and the beneficiation process It then describes fundamental principles of the sintering and pelletization processes including formation of green mix through granulation and green balls as well as chemical reactions during sintering Finally it offers a brief description of iron making processes and correlations related to the agglomerates quality parameters and BF productivity and coke rate
