genocide Attempts made by researchers and practitioners to understand counter and prevent bullying behaviour are reviewed A key finding has been that the success that has been accrued has been limited especially when the case of those who belong to so called minority groups who are often the target of prejudice outside of the school gates is considered it is suggested that future anti bullying actions should meaningfully engage with prejudice as an underlying factor After a critical consideration of the various psychological understandings of aggression aggressive behaviour and marginalisation has been made the author goes on to introduce and assess an eight stage model of physical genocide based primarily on insights from social cognitive psychology and exemplified in the history of the Lakota Cheyenne Campaign 1864 1890 This is followed by a consideration of the cultural genocide levelled against indigenous peoples exemplified in the Sami people in Norway and indigenous peoples of North America as implemented through the actions of educational systems and educators The book ends with some suggestions being made regarding our potential to address the One and Other mindset that is proposed as underlying the continuum of aggressive marginalisation phenomena through the psychological understandings that we can offer the educational practice that we can provide and in the conscious acts of the affirmation of humanity we can make in our individual and collective choices Stephen James Minton is a lecturer in the psychology of education at the School of Education Trinity College Dublin Ireland He has extensive experience in the fields of anti bullying research and practice and is interested in the histories and psychosocial situations and especially the educational experiences of marginalised people and groups

Principles of Aggression Theories and the Underlying Cause of Bullying Behavior

Patrick Kimuyu,2018-04-24 Seminar paper from the year 2018 in the subject Medicine Medical Frontiers and Special Areas grade 1 Egerton University language English abstract Aggression has emerged as a social and public health issue that calls for advanced understanding as well as the adoption of appropriate interventions Its contemporary prominence has attracted an immense focus from social scientists and clinical experts In explaining what aggression entails the concerned groups have advanced diverse perspectives on the one hand theorists have always sought to explain why individuals express aggressive behavior as part of their core personality traits On the other hand biologists have been investigating possible neural basis of aggression arguing that aggressive behavior is innate whereas a majority of psychologists hold that aggression attitudes are a product of social and environmental interactions Based on these diverse perspectives an unprecedented debate the nature versus nurture controversy has emerged to explain the causes of aggression Surprisingly clear disagreements over the origin of aggression exist among psychologists Some have upheld the tenets of psychodynamic approach to describe human aggressive behavior as an instinctive construct hence innate whereas cognitive theorists hold that aggression is learnt Despite the lack of consensus on the basis of human aggression it is explicit that this behavior bears undesirable consequences Of great concern is bullying an aspect that has become a serious social problem among the global community and which will be interrogated in depth in this discussion According to Swearer Wang Berry and Myers bullying has emerged as a disastrous social relationship problem In theory bullying can be described as a form of aggression that is characterized by a systematic and repeated abuse of power Over the past few decades bullying has been blamed for an increase in suicidal cases and delinquency especially among the youth In summary this paper focuses on discussing the social psychological basis of bullying behavior in a manner that is consistent with the principles of aggression theories Handbook of School Violence, Bullying and Safety Jun S.
