

Typical single stage pump curve

- For example if a flow of 500 gpm at 55 feet of head is required we can see that the 8.5" impeller will not be enough to perform this capacity. Single stage impellers can be trimmed to meet particular performance requirements so in this case the impeller can be trimmed to 8.625 inches. Typically impellers are trimmed in 1/8" increments.
- The efficiency curves are shown so that pump efficiency can be determined for the varying impeller trims. For this flow and head the efficiency would be between 78 and 79%, somewhere around 78.4%.
- The brake horsepower curves are also shown to accommodate the varying impeller sizes as well.
