Classical Conditioning:

A Neuroscientist's Guide to Classical Conditioning John W. Moore, 2012-09-05 Classical conditioning CC refers to the general paradigm for scientific studies of learning and memory initiated by Pavlov and his followers. As a model system of associative learning in human and animals, CC continues to play a central role in research and an expanding role in evaluating disorders of learning and memory, aging, drug abuse, and teratology. The book is aimed at the growing population of scientists and medical specialists who employ CC methods. Despite the current high level of interest in CC within neuroscience, there is presently no single source that provides up-to-date comprehensive coverage of core topics. CC is a very large field. Nevertheless, some organisms and behaviors have dominated the neuroscience scene. Foremost of these are classical eyeblink conditioning, rats, cats, rabbits, and humans, and fear conditioning. This handbook of CC focuses on these systems.

Classical Conditioning Isidore Gormezano, William Frederick Prokasy, Richard F. Thompson, 1987. First published in 1986, Routledge is an imprint of Taylor & Francis, an information company. Handbook of Classical Conditioning David G. Lavond, Joseph E. Steinmetz, 2012-12-06 When conducting scientific research in any field, it is not sufficient to simply design thoughtful and informative experiments to explore ideas and hypotheses. The experiments must be conducted in such a manner that the data generated effectively address the ideas and hypotheses under study. Collecting good data necessitates the use of good methods, techniques, and instrumentation. Behavioral neuroscience is most certainly a field that over the years has required novel, inventive, and effective methods and techniques to collect data on a rather difficult subject, namely, how the brain and nervous system encode behavior. Perhaps one of the most interesting things about the field of behavioral neuroscience is that most scientists in this field are engaged in a variety of activities; it is not always the same boring routine. The rule, not the exception, in this field is that investigators are trained in a variety of techniques and skills. This work requires knowledge of skills in such diverse techniques as surgery, animal training, basic electronics, computer programming, statistics, and histology, as well as having a good theoretical background, knowledge of the relevant literature, and the creativity and logic necessary to design and execute critical experiments. One does not have to be an expert in all of these skills, and conversely, not all skills require an expert.

Classical Conditioning and Operant Conditioning W.W. Henton, I.H. Iversen, 2012-12-06 Since the appearance of the treatise on Schedules of Reinforcement by Ferster and Skinner over two decades ago, the literature in behavior analysis, both experimental and applied, has been dominated by a range of studies dedicated to providing ever more systematic and refined accounts of these mainsprings of behavior control. For the most part, the analysis has been pursued in the best traditions of scientific methodology, with careful attention to the isolation of controlling variables in unitary form. Of late, relatively simple interaction effects have provided an important additional focus for more sophisticated analyses. It is clear, however, from even a cursory survey of the monumental research and conceptual analysis which is represented in this scholarly volume by Henton and Iversen, that the surface of this complex be behavioral interactions domain has barely been scratched The primary focus of this pioneering effort extends the competing response analysis across all experimental schedules both classical and instrumental as well as the interactions between the two Appropriately the analysis emphasizes overt behavioral interactions beginning with the simplest case of one operant and one respondent and inevitably implicating more diverse and subtle interactions As the analysis expands to include interactions between multiple recorded responses increasingly more precise empirical specifications of reciprocal interactions in response probabilities are revealed independently of conventional procedural labels i e operants respondents collaterals adjunctives etc and traditional theoretical distinctions

Eyeblink Classical Conditioning Volume 2 Diana S. Woodruff-Pak, Joseph E. Steinmetz, 2007-05-08 Classical conditioning of the nictitating membrane NM eyeblink response in rabbits is a useful model system for the study of the neurobiology of learning and memory This paradigm that is so well described on a biological level has also been applied to studies of normal development over the life span and to instances of abnormal developmental phenomena Eyeblink conditioning has been studied from molecular and neural network perspectives and the paradigm is of demonstrated utility in elucidating mechanisms in physiology and pharmacology This model system provides a behavioral paradigm in animals that has a close analog in human behavior Perspectives of recent developments in human eyeblink classical conditioning research are presented in the companion volume to this book
