ABSTRACT

The reaction of twenty-four new synthetic banana hybrids to Pratylenchus coffeae was studied under artificially inoculated pot conditions. Two banana hybrids, H-04-05 and H-04-06 were found to be resistant and ten hybrids, H-04-01, H-04-03, H-04-04, H-04-07, H-04-09, H-04-11, H-04-16, H-04-19, H-04-21 and H-04-24 were found to be tolerant to the lesion nematode, Pratylenchus coffeae and the remaining were rated as susceptible.

Keywords : Resistance, banana, hybrids, Pratylenchus coffeae

INTRODUCTION

Crop losses in bananas caused by nematodes are very high, with an average annual yield loss estimated at about 20 per cent worldwide (Sasser and Freckman, 1987). Two of the most widespread and important nematode species associated with bananas and plantains are the burrowing nematode Radopholus similis and the lesion nematode Pratylenchus coffeae. These lesion-inducing nematodes feed, multiply and migrate inside the roots and corm and cause a necrotic and reduced root system. Hence, it is important to screen the cultivars or hybrids for their reaction to nematodes. In light of the above, the present study was undertaken at Horticultural College and Research Institute, Tamil Nadu Agricultural University, Coimbatore, India.

MATERIAL AND METHODS

Banana hybrids used in the present study were evolved in the institute with the main objective of breeding for resistance/tolerance to nematodes along with good yield traits. The hybrids were assessed for their reaction to lesion nematode, Pratylenchus coffeae. The experiments were conducted in a glass house in potted plants which were inoculated artificially. The experiment was laid out in randomised block design and replicated thrice. The hybrids were evaluated along with the reference cultivars viz., Rasthali (AAB, syn.silk) as the susceptible reference cultivar and Pisang Lilin (AA) as the resistant reference cultivar. The screening was done based on the root and corm damage assessment as followed in INIBAP technical guidelines 7 (Carlter et al., 2003).

Preparation of plant material

Suckers of uniform size were pared immediately after detaching from the mother plant, and planted in pots filled with sterilized pot mixture. The soil was watered upto field capacity. Four weeks after planting, 8-10 plants of each genotype were inoculated with lesion nematodes (1 nematode per gram of soil), while another set of 8-10 plants were kept as nematode-free control.

Culturing and extraction of nematodes

Carrot disc culture

Surface sterilized carrot was cut into discs and placed in sterile petri dishes. Nematodes extracted from the infected roots through Baermann-funnel method were surface sterilized and transferred to the carrot discs with a sterile micropipette. Small drops of nematode suspension were placed on the margin of the carrot discs. The petri dishes were sealed with parafilm, labelled and stored in an incubator at 28°C. Sub-culturing of nematodes on fresh carrot discs was done periodically and the extracted nematodes were used for inoculation in pot culture experiments (Carlter et al., 2003).

Inoculation of nematodes in pots

Nematode suspension obtained from the above method, containing infective juveniles of Pratylenchus coffeae, were inoculated into the pots, forty five days after
