Stachowicz,Magdalena Sowa-Kucma,Anna Tabęcka-Łonczynska,2024-04-15 Depression is a common mental disorder and one of the leading causes of hospitalization Simultaneously this disorder is the most notorious vulnerability factor to suicide attempts among men and women The COVID 19 pandemic COVID 19 related stressors resulted in a statistically significant increase in depression incidences Pharmacological treatment in the clinic is primarily based on substances synthesized in the 1960s and 1970s High hopes were associated with compounds increasing the level of catecholamines in the brain and reducing excitotoxic levels of glutamate Glu However side effects associated with cognition and psychosis are common Therefore it is crucial to synthesize new pharmacologically active substances or combine those used in clinical practice to define further directions in the development of novel more effective therapeutics for depression The pharmacotherapy of depression - searching for new mechanisms and drug interactions. Tabęcka-Łonczynska,Magdalena Sowa-Kucma,2023-01-02 Depression: From Psychopathology to Pharmacotherapy J. F. Cryan,B. E. Leonard,2011-07-01 Despite the availability of antidepressants for over 40 years a substantial proportion of depressed patients do not respond adequately to treatment Failure to respond effectively to treatment contributes to physical ill health and psychiatric morbidity often resulting in premature death of the depressed patient The purpose of this volume is to consider the possible reasons for the limitations of the currently available antidepressants to examine the advances in our understanding of the psychopathology of depression and how such knowledge may assist in the discovery of new methods of treatment Leading international experts in this field discuss the possible underlying reasons for depression and limitations of current antidepressants Opportunities for novel therapeutic approaches to dysfunctional circadian rhythms and mood

Public Health Service Publication ,1968 Implications of Psychopharmacology to Psychiatry M. Ackenheil,B. Bondy,R. Engel,M. Ermann,N. Nedopil,2012-12-06 The discovery of chlorpromazine for the specific treatment of schizophrenic symptoms and later on of imipramine for the specific treatment of depressive symptoms marked a new milestone in clinical psychiatry and basic neuroscience 40 years ago The exploration of biochemical mechanisms of action of these psychotropic drugs created new theories on the pathophysiology of psychiatric disorders such as the dopamine hypothesis of schizophrenia and the catecholamine and serotonin hypotheses of depression Thus the discovery of these biological treatments had a major impact on natural science oriented research Biological psychiatry as we know it today has its origin in these psychopharmacological drugs and influences many disciplines in psychiatry It was a fortunate coincidence that Hans Hippius whose 70th birthday we celebrated this year with an international symposium started his professional career during this time in the 1950s He was one of the early pioneers in clinical psychopharmacological research and enthusiastic about both the scientific and the therapeutic prospects of the new psychotropic drugs He has worked in this field for more than three decades and has made many lasting contributions to biological psychiatry Among the many activities his contributions in the development of the new atypical antipsychotic drug clozapine should be mentioned
