There is not a single book that fully examines special educational and mainstreaming issues and also addresses the subjects of instruction and curriculum development. This textbook bridges that gap. Written for those in search of both answers and ideas for mainstreaming children, and those already involved in working with mainstream students, it first mainstreams, through individual chapters devoted to special and handicapped children, such as emotionally handicapped, physically handicapped, and mentally retarded, handicapped and learning disabled, hearing and visually impaired, and developmentally delayed. It then mainstreams, through the final chapter devoted to integrating art programs for special children, mainstreaming issues, methods and materials involved. This text addresses the mainstreaming of children.
