

Art at the Heart: Creating a Meaningful Art Curriculum for Young Children

Deborah P. Johnson, Principal, The Art Center for Young Children, National Museum of American Art, Young Children

DOI: 10.1215/00141801-2016-001

As principal of the National Museum of American Art's Young Children Center, I have spent much of my professional life thinking about how to create an art curriculum that goes beyond a simple offering of busy activities, full of quality materials with engaging and meaningful, playful and thought-provoking ideas. In my current experience, though, I see the potential of an art curriculum as a space for children to explore, experiment, and learn. I have seen especially meaningful moments in my school, which is inspired by the Reggio Emilia approach. My school's art curriculum was not the most important aspect of my work because my children's learning is not just about their experiences with art, but also about their experiences with the world.

Many years and an enormous amount of time and effort have been spent on the art curriculum. I have seen the art curriculum as a space for children to explore, experiment, and learn. I have seen especially meaningful moments in my school, which is inspired by the Reggio Emilia approach. My school's art curriculum was not the most important aspect of my work because my children's learning is not just about their experiences with art, but also about their experiences with the world.

Creating a meaningful art curriculum and the art curriculum itself are not the same. I have seen the art curriculum as a space for children to explore, experiment, and learn. I have seen especially meaningful moments in my school, which is inspired by the Reggio Emilia approach. My school's art curriculum was not the most important aspect of my work because my children's learning is not just about their experiences with art, but also about their experiences with the world.

Young Children and the Arts Carol Korn-Bursztyn, 2012-04-01. Young Children and the Arts: Nurturing Imagination and Creativity examines the place of the arts in the experiences of young and very young children at home and in out-of-home settings at school and in the community. There is great need for development of resources in the arts specifically designed to introduce babies and toddlers to participatory experiences in the visual arts, dance, music, and storytelling theater. This book presents valuable guidelines for early childhood teachers, families, caregivers, and community organizations. Young Children and the Arts presents a comprehensive approach to the arts that is aligned with early childhood developmentally appropriate practice and that combines an exploratory materials-based approach with an aesthetic education approach for children from birth to eight years of age. It addresses both how the arts are foundational to learning and how teachers and parents can nurture young children's developing imagination and creativity. The models presented emphasize a participatory approach introducing young children to the arts through activities that call for engagement, initiative, and creative activity. Additionally, Young Children and the Arts addresses the intersection of early childhood education and the arts at points of convergence and at moments of tension. The role of families and communities in developing and promoting arts-suffused experiences for and with young children are addressed. Young Children and the Arts examines the role of innovative arts policy in supporting a broad-based early arts program across the diverse settings in which young children and their families live, work, and learn.
