

Documenting Democracy: Lesson Plans on the United States Constitution

In Commemoration of Constitution Day

On September 17, 1787, the United States Constitution was signed at Independence Hall in Philadelphia by 39 of the 55 delegates attending the Constitutional Convention. Their actions paved the way for a historic document that has defined our nation's framework and protected our democratic form of government for more than two centuries.

Two hundred and fifteen years later, on December 8, 2004, President Bush signed a law establishing September 17 as Constitution Day and requested an educational program in all federally funded institutions to commemorate this vital document. This curriculum guide gives teachers the opportunity to participate in study activities focused on the U.S. Constitution on Constitution Day in September. These lessons can also be used in collaboration with course units on government or history at any time during the course of the school year.

If you only have time for one Constitution-related activity for the September commemoration, we suggest printing out a copy of the Preamble and having your students read it aloud.

Introducing the Constitution

After the American Revolution established the independence of the United States from Britain, a great challenge faced the leaders of this new nation. While the United States was free to set its own course, the challenge of creating a set of rules and laws that would unite a diverse set of people tested the leaders of this fragile new nation. At first, the Articles of Confederation (1781) provided the law of the land, but it quickly became clear that a project like the United States demanded a strong central government. Over the summer of 1787, delegates from 12 of the 13 states gathered in Philadelphia to fashion a government from scratch. They decided to write a new Constitution and met in secrecy for 55 days in the sweltering heat, trying to resolve many of the problems about which people in the states felt so strongly. The biggest hurdle was to find a middle ground between those who favored a federal system in which a national government would hold most of the authority (Federalists), and those who wanted individual states to have maximum power to make decisions locally (Anti-Federalists).

The Anti-Federalists felt that their loyalty was to their state, not a central government. After all, they had fought as Virginians and Pennsylvanians and they had won the war hadn't they? There was deep distrust of any government that was too centralized because there was the danger that it would become like the monarchy of King George III and not allow them to
