durbar The two figures who rode at the head of the glittering cortege formed an almost startling contrast One of them answered in every detail the popular conception of an Asiatic potentate haughty of manner portly of person with a clear dark skin and wonderfully piercing eyes and a great black beard spreading fan wise upon his breast An aigret of diamonds flashed and scintillated in his flame colored turban rubies large as robin s eggs gleamed in his ears and hanging from his neck over his pale blue surtout was a rope of pearls which would have roused the envy of an empress His companion to whom he paid marked attention was equally noticeable though in quite a different fashion a lean smooth shaven lantern jawed man still in the middle thirties very cold and reserved of manner with a great beak of a nose and a jaw like a granite crag It did not need the cocked hat and gold epaulets of a British general to mark him as a soldier As the cortege cantered onto the maidan the massed bands of the cavalry burst into a wild barbaric march brass and kettle drums crashing together in stirring discord The strains ceased as abruptly as they began and the youthful commander rising in his stirrups shot his blade into the air and called in a voice like a trumpet Cheers for his Highness And back came a guttural roar from ten thousand throats Long live the Nizam Obviously gratified at the warmth of his greeting the ruler of the Deccan wheeled his horse and came cantering up to the cavalryman whose sword flashed in salute Boyd Sahib he said you are a veritable magician You turn ryots into soldiers as readily as a fakir turns a stone into bread Your men are admirable I congratulate you on their appearance Then turning to his taciturn companion Sir Arthur Wellesley permit me to present to you Boyd Sahib commander of my cavalry and my trusted friend General Boyd he added glancing at the Englishman with a malicious smile is a very brilliant soldier and an American
