All About Asthma Irwin J. Polk, 1997-03-22 All about Asthma Stop Suffering and Start Living is an astute examination of a disease that persists despite the best efforts of medical science Dr Polk an expert with over 40 years of experience treating asthma and allergic diseases discusses important new techniques and equipment for identifying asthma and cost effective medicines for prevention and treatment He notes that drug companies are also evaluating new chemicals and devices for prevention and treatment of episodes of asthma According to the author specialists are broadening their horizons by paying closer attention to inflammation of the lungs as a prime target for asthma management All about Asthma will be an invaluable resource that will help patients and their families understand and control this disease The Journal of Respiratory Diseases , 1997-07 Handbook of Clinical Psychology in Medical Settings Ronald H. Rozensky, Jerry J.

Sweet, Steven M. Tovian, 2013-06-29 For two decades I have been responding to questions about the nature of health psychology and how it differs from medical psychology behavioral medicine and clinical psychology From the beginning I have taken the position that any application of psychological theory or practice to problems and issues of the health system is health psychology I have repeatedly used an analogy to Newell and Simon's General Problem Solver program of the late 1950s and early 1960s which had two major functional parts in addition to the executive component One was the problem solving core the procedural competence the other was the representation of the problem environment In the analogy the concepts knowledge and techniques of psychology constitute the core competence the health system in all its complexity is the problem environment A health psychologist is one whose basic competence in psychology is augmented by a working knowledge of some aspect of the health system Quite apparently there are functionally distinct aspects of health psychology to the degree that there are meaningful subdivisions in psychological competence and significantly different microenvironments within the health system I hesitate to refer to them as areas of specialization as the man who gave health psychology its formal definition Joseph Matarazzo has said that there are no specialties in psychology cited in the editors preface to this book Bronchial Asthma M. Eric Gershwin, Georges M. Halpern, 2012-12-06 Although the mechanisms and triggers that stimulate and are responsible for the natural history of asthma are steadily being more clearly defined uncertainties still surround both the genetic basis and the etiology of one of the most common syndromes in the world In fact it is of considerable concern and interest that the incidence of asthma today appears to be rising These statistical increments may only reflect an increasing awareness of the disease or its earlier and more sophisticated diagnosis More important however asthma mortality appears to be increasing This increase has occurred despite the continuing expansion of a diagnostic and management information base and the development of novel and ever more effective therapeutic modalities Several explanations have been offered for this increase in mortality including that it may result from a statistical artifact based on a change in the coding criteria for asthma from the International Classification of Diseases Version 8 ICD 8 to ICD 9 worsened pollution delays in seeking medical help behavioral changes deficits in the asthma education of both patients and primary care providers toxicity of beta agonists and noncompliance with instructions for the proper use of medications It should also be emphasized that the increases in both incidence and mortality may be a reflection of accumulating body burdens of environmental toxicants and of increased oxidative damage There has clearly been a degradation of environmental quality And although considerable attention has been focused on this possibility in both the scientific and lay press more research in this area is definitely needed
