Breeding Plantation Tree Crops: Tropical Species Shri Mohan Jain, P.M. Priyadarshan, 2008-10-08 Tree species are indispensable to support human life Due to their long life cycle and environmental sensitivity breeding trees to suit day to day human needs is a formidable challenge Whether they are edible or industrial crops improving yield under optimal sub optimal and marginal areas calls for unified efforts from the scientists around the world. While the uniqueness of coconut as kalpavriksha Sanskrit meaning tree of life marks its presence in every continent from Far East to South America tree crops like cocoa oil palm rubber apple peach grapes and walnut prove their environmental sensitivity towards tropical sub tropical and temperate climates. Desert climate is quintessential for date palm. Thus from soft drinks to breweries to beverages to oil to tyres the value addition offers a spectrum of products to human kind enriched with nutritional environmental financial social and trade related attributes. Taxonomically tree crops do not confine to a few families but spread across a section of genera an attribute so unique that contributes immensely to genetic biodiversity even while cultivated at the commercial scale. Many of these species in need of other flora to nurture in their vicinity thus ensuring their integrity in preserving the genetic biodiversity. While wheat rice maize barley soybean cassava and banana make up the major food staples many fruit tree species contribute greatly to nutritional enrichment in human diet. The edible part of these species is the source of several nutrients that makes additives for the daily diet of humans for example vitamins sugars aromas and flavour compounds and raw material for food processing industries. Tree crops face an array of agronomic and horticultural problems in propagation yield appearance quality diseases and pest control abiotic stresses and poor shelf life.
