Martens and Fishers (Martes) in Human-Altered Environments Daniel J. Harrison, Angela K. Fuller, Gilbert Proulx, 2006-02-28 Martens and Fishers Martes in Human Altered Environments An International Perspective examines the conditions where humans and martens are compatible and incompatible and promotes land use practices that allow Martes to be representatively distributed and viable All Martes have been documented to use forested habitats and 6 species excluding the stone marten are generally considered to require complex mid to late successional forests throughout much of their geographic ranges All species in the genus require complex horizontal and vertical structure to provide escape cover protection from predators habitat for their prey access to food resources and protection from the elements Martens and the fisher have high metabolic rates have large spatial requirements have high surface area to volume ratios for animals that often inhabit high latitudes and often require among the largest home range areas per unit body weight of any group of mammals Resulting from these unique life history characteristics this genus is particularly sensitive to human influences on their habitats including habitat loss stand scale simplification of forest structure via some forms of logging and landscape scale effects of habitat fragmentation Given their strong associations with structural complexity in forests martens and the fisher are often considered as useful barometers of forest health and have been used as ecological indicators flagship and umbrella species in different parts of the world Thus efforts to successfully conserve and manage martens and fishers are associated with the ecological fates of other forest dependent species and can greatly influence ecosystem integrity within forests that are increasingly shared among wildlife and humans We have made great strides in our fundamental understanding of how animals with these unique life history traits perceive and utilize habitats respond to habitat change and how their populations function and perform under different forms of human management and mismanagement This knowledge enhances our basic understanding of all species of Martes and will help us to achieve the goal of conserving viable populations and representative distributions of the world's Martes their habitats and associated ecological communities in our new millennium Cape Wind Energy Project, 2009 Forthcoming Books Rose Arny, 2003

Resource Utilization and Development Shri Kamal Sharma, 1992 The relationship between resources and development is the pivot around which the present study revolves Focussing on the process of resource creation and utilization it emphasizes the need of equitable development integrating local needs resources people and functions The resource exploitation and their utilization are two independent economic activities influenced by different algorithms and usually have manifested in core periphery relationship Reviews the persistent problems of economic development in perspective of exploitation of natural resources with the objective to provide some clues for occurrence and persistence of regional disparities and for suggesting a development model synchronising both the resource management and environmental protection Dynamics of Northern Societies Jette Arneborg, 2006 The prehistory and early history of northern societies from the Palaeo Eskimo pioneers to the Viking Norse Settlers is unfolding through archaeological and historical research and through interdisciplinary studies including natural sciences The more insight that we have gained on Arctic and North Atlantic archaeology the more we have realized how diverse and dynamic these societies were and how complex their histories are This volume deals with new approaches to dynamic analysis of Palaeo Eskimo artefacts Interaction with the environment Dynamics of small scale societies Architecture and social organization of space in Palaeo Eskimo and Inuit contexts Origins and spread of the Palaeo Eskimo and Inuit cultures Demography death and burials Living with things Trade and Exchange Focal places A Test of the Economic Base Hypothesis in the Small Forest Communities of Southeast Alaska Guy C. Robertson, 2003 Recent harvest declines in the Western United States have focused attention on the question of economic impacts at the community level The impact of changing timber related economic activity in a given community on other local activity and the general economic health of the community at large has been a persistent and often contentious issue in debates surrounding forest policy decisions The economic base hypothesis in which changes in local export related economic activity are assumed to cause changes in economic activity serving local demand is a common framework for understanding impacts of forest policy decisions and forms the basis of models commonly used to provide estimates of expected local impacts under different policy options This study uses community specific time series employment data to test the economic base hypothesis in the small semi isolated communities of southeast Alaska Estimates were derived for each of 15 communities Export related activity was not found to cause changes in economic activity serving local demand for the average community However the results indicated statistically significant differences among communities in their response to shocks in export related activity The implications of these results for policy and for the theory and practice of modeling economic impacts at small spatial scales are explored in the final sections of this study Specifically secondary economic impacts cannot be taken as a foregone conclusion in policy analysis and the fundamental assumptions of static impact modeling approaches deserve greater scrutiny The Impacts of EPA's Proposed
