Social Security: The Trust Funds and Interest Income

Background

The Old-Age, Survivors, and Disability Insurance (OASDI) program, or Social Security, is a self-financing social insurance program that protects workers and their families against loss of income due to old age, death, or disability. Workers become eligible for future benefits by working in Social Security-covered employment. (About 94% of workers in paid employment and self-employment are covered under Social Security.) Given that Social Security covers approximately 182 million workers and pays benefits to over 65 million beneficiaries, it is the federal government's single largest program.

The financial status of Social Security determines the program's ability to pay fully scheduled benefits on time—that is, the ability to provide monthly payments to current and future beneficiaries. At a basic level, the financial status of Social Security is simply the relationship among revenues, expenses, and the holdings in the Social Security trust funds. This report focuses on the trust funds and interest income, a decreasing source of income for the program.

Sources of Income

Social Security is primarily financed through a payroll tax where employers and workers each pay 6.2% of covered earnings up to an annual limit ($147,000 in 2022). Payroll taxes accounted for 90.1% of program income in 2021. Additionally, some beneficiaries are subjected to federal income tax on a portion of their Social Security benefits. Taxation of benefits accounted for 3.5% of program income in 2021. The payroll tax and income from taxation of benefits are commonly referred to as the program's tax revenues or non-interest income. These tax revenues are used to pay monthly Social Security benefits.

A third source of income is interest income. Excess revenues that are not needed to immediately pay benefits are credited to the Social Security trust funds. As required by law, any excess revenues are invested in interest-bearing U.S. Treasury securities held in trust funds. This transaction loans money to the “rest of government.” Interest on trust fund asset reserves accounted for 6.4% of program income in 2021. The average interest rate on asset reserves (i.e., effective interest rate) was 2.5% in 2021.

The Trust Funds

The trust funds provide the program with a means to track revenues and expenses. Additionally, the trust funds provide a means for the Social Security program to hold accumulated assets—that is, money not immediately needed to pay benefits—for the payment of future benefits. At the end of 2021, the trust fund balance was $2,852 billion. This balance represents the accumulation of excess revenues and the interest earned on those excess revenues. The Board of Trustees oversees the Social Security trust funds and is required by law to report to Congress annually on the financial status of the trust funds.

From 1983 through 2009, Social Security operated with a cash surplus (i.e., tax revenues exceeded expenses). The cash surplus is the shaded blue area, as shown in Figure 1.

Notes: Projections use the trustees' 2022 intermediate projections.

Each of those year's cash surpluses were invested in government securities and earned interest. Figure 2 shows how those cash surpluses (i.e., trust fund asset reserves) and the earned interest grew over time. However, Figure 2 also shows how the value of the trust funds decreased in 2021. Figure 2 also shows the projected value of the trust funds decreasing to zero by the end of 2035 (under the Board of Trustees' 2022 intermediate assumptions, its best guess of future experience).
