Sarah's Present, Or, The Story of a New Testament Sarah (fict. name.),1862 The First Journal: Some Stories Should Never Be Read Muhammad Farjad ,2025-03-26 Some books whisper This one screams Sarah Whitmore never believed in ghosts until she found the journal Buried deep in the restricted section of the university library the ancient leather bound book sat waiting its pages untouched for decades At first it seemed like a forgotten relic a curiosity hidden among the dust and shadows But when Sarah opened it she discovered something horrifying her name written in fresh ink on the first page The journal wasn t just old It wasn t just mysterious It knew her And then the words began to change The ink is still wet and it s writing her story Each time Sarah turned the page new entries appeared entries she hadn t written yet they told her thoughts her fears and the events of her life with terrifying accuracy What started as an eerie coincidence became an inescapable nightmare when her best friends Mia and Jason vanished without a trace Their names had been in the journal Their fates had been sealed Desperate for answers Sarah dives into the book s origins uncovering stories of past readers each one meeting a tragic unexplained end The deeper she digs the more the journal tightens its grip on her reality Whispers echo from its pages Shadows stretch unnaturally in the corners of her room The lines between her world and the journal s twisted tale begin to blur until she can no longer tell which one she belongs to The book isn t just telling a story It s a trapping one And unless Sarah finds a way to break its curse she will be the next name written in its final chapter The nightmare has begun The pages are turning And the book is waiting Dare to read The nightmare has begun The pages are turning And the book is waiting But be warned once you start reading the story won t just stay on the page It will follow you The whispers will creep into the silence of the night The shadows will stretch just a little too far And the next time you open a book you might find your own name written inside Go on Turn the first page Just remember some books don't let go
