Alcohol And Aldehyde Metabolizing Systems:

Alcohol and Aldehyde Metabolizing Systems Ronald G. Thurman, John R. Williamson, Henry R. Drott, 2014-05-10
Alcohol and Aldehyde Metabolizing Systems Volume II Enzymology and Subcellular Organelles contains some of the papers presented at the Second International Symposium on Alcohol and Aldehyde Metabolizing Systems held at the University of Pennsylvania in October 1976 Experts in the field from a wide variety of backgrounds tackled the problems of alcohol and aldehyde metabolism discussed research findings and examined controversial issues ranging from the molecular structure of enzymes to the clinical actions of alcohol in humans Comprised of 43 chapters this volume begins by comparing the enzymatically catalyzed oxidation of glyceraldehyde 3 phosphate and lactate followed by an analysis of liver alcohol dehydrogenase and its mechanism of action The reader is methodically introduced to the kinetics and mechanism of activated liver alcohol dehydrogenase structural and functional changes in different alcohol dehydrogenases during evolution and localization and properties of aldehyde reductase Subsequent chapters deal with the correlation between the activity of acetaldehyde dehydrogenase and the structure of mitochondria the distribution of subcellular organelles and peroxisomes and microsomes This book will be of value to practitioners and researchers from a variety of disciplines including biochemistry physiology cell biology and pharmacology Alcohol and Aldehyde Metabolizing Systems Ronald G. Thurman, John R. Williamson, Henry R. Drott, 2014-05-10 Alcohol and Aldehyde Metabolizing Systems Volume III Intermediary Metabolism and Neurochemistry contains some of the papers presented at the Second International Symposium on Alcohol and Aldehyde Metabolizing Systems held at the University of Pennsylvania in October 1976 Experts in the field from a wide variety of backgrounds tackled the problems of alcohol and aldehyde metabolism discussed research findings and examined controversial issues such as the effects of alcohol and aldehydes on intermediary metabolism Comprised of 64 chapters this volume begins with an analysis of the non equilibrium behavior of biochemical systems followed by a discussion on the configurational specificity of glycolytic enzymes The reader is methodically introduced to redox compartmentation and the measurement of intracellular compartmentation of metabolites in rat liver effect of chronic alcohol and oxygen tension on the development of hepatic necrosis in rats and actions of ethanol metabolism on fatty acid synthesis in the liver Subsequent chapters focus on regional metabolic rate in the central nervous system as related to function effects of tetrahydroisoquinoline derivatives of catecholamines and aldehydes on tyrosine hydroxylase and lowering of blood acetaldehyde levels as a therapeutic approach to alcoholism This book will be of value to practitioners and researchers from a variety of disciplines including neurochemistry biochemistry physiology cell biology and pharmacology Alcohol and Aldehyde Metabolizing Systems-IV Ronald Thurman, 2013-11-11 The papers in this book represent the proceedings of the Third International Symposium which was held at the Addiction Research Foundation in Toronto in July 1979 The purpose of this meeting was to bring together experts in the field from a wide variety of backgrounds in an attempt to gain some clarity and insight into the problems of alcohol and aldehyde metabolism One might ask Why have such a meeting and a collection of research papers The answer is clear The societal problem of alcoholism is unlike many other health problems growing instead of abating Treatment efforts are largely ineffective e g Griffith Edwards classic work and fundamental research has yet to identify rational therapy based on sound mechanisms for this disease which effects 5% of the population severely and a much greater percentage to a lesser degree or indirectly I have become impressed with the possibility that this lack of progress may be in large part due to a fundamental oversight on the part of investigators in the field of alcohol research Simply this possible problem could be stated as follows an alcoholic is defined the same way as all other alcoholics Attempts to identify possible subpopulations of alcoholics with defined and treatable diseases have been minimal One could argue however that little evidence with the exception of the gross psychiatric definitions e g Jellinek exists that there are different types of alcoholics This argument is countered first by the dismal lack of progress made in this field by classifying an alcoholic equal to other alcoholics and second by analogy with cancer research Now we know that cancer is only a generic term which defines a broad group of diseases some caused by specific environmental chemicals others by viruses etc Progress was only possible after suitable animal models were developed More importantly however is the fact that once specific forms of the disease i e once the diseases themselves were separated from the generic term were identified it was a relatively easy task to develop tests for early identification of some forms of the disease e g the pap smear etc This analogy can be extended to alcoholism s First let us assume that we have failed to develop tests for early identification of alcoholisms because the population is not carefully defined into subgroups If we assume that subpopulations of alcoholics exist we can again turn to the cancer literature for examples of how to proceed Much progress in this field rests On the careful development of strains of animals which differ in their susceptibility to certain carcinogens By analogy distinct forms of alcoholisms could be identified by the use of genetics e g Goodwin First distinct phenotypes need to be developed for certain characteristics suspected to be important in alcoholism Second a test specific for early identification of this specific phenotype can then be developed Third longitudinal studies must be performed in humans to see if the animal work can be applied to man Implicit in this rationale is the thought that progress is not possible by studying alcoholics 20 years after primary changes had occurred nor even by studying pre alcoholics until specific sub forms of the disease are identified Thus the need for fundamental research into the mechanisms responsible for alcoholism is required Unfortunately alcohol research appears to suffer some of the stigma of the alcoholic

Crabb,Henry Weiner,Bendicht Wermuth,2012-12-06 The Fifth International Workshop on the Enzymology and Molecular Biology of Carbonyl Metabolism was held at Purdue University in June 1990 This represents the fifth time that I had the privilege of organizing the scientific program It was the first time that I actually hosted the meeting I wish to salute my four previous co organizers and the thousands of scientists who have hosted other meetings It is much easier to arrange the scientific program and edit the proceedings No local organization could occur without the help of ones research group and in this case my wife I sincerely thank Esther and my research group for their advise and help At this Workshop similar to the preceeding ones much new information was presented It was apparent how molecular biological techniques were influencing the direction of the research on the three families of enzymes discussed It also was apparent that not all biochemical problems could be solved by using these techniques Many of the presentations showed how important advances still could be made using more traditional biochemical approaches Current Catalog National Library of Medicine (U.S.), First multi year cumulation covers six years 1965 70 Research Awards Index ,1981

Biochemical Pharmacology of Ethanol Edward Majchrowicz,2013-11-11 A number of excellent symposia reviews and monographs on the biology of ethanol have been published during the last decade Al though it may appear that another such publication may be superflu ous the subject of alcohol abuse is still open for further explora tion and the field of the biochemical pharmacology of ethanol is in its infancy This is evidenced for example by the unavailability of any drugs that are designed specifically for the treatment of alcohol intoxication or alcohol addiction The impetus for this publication was generated by a spontane ous enthusiasm following the symposium on BiochemicaZ Ph acoZogy of EthanoZ that was organized at the annual meeting of the American Chemical Society Division of Biological Chemistry in August 1973 in Chicago It was the first symposium on such a topic ever in cluded in the program of that large society of American chemists The original aim of the symposium was to acquaint the members of the society with some basic facts about the biological chemistry of ethanol The symposium included seven papers and covered a rela tively narrow range of ethanol biochemistry In view of the enthu siasm shown at the Chemical Society meeting the panelists decided to publish the program and to amplify it by inclusion of additional topics which have remained relatively unexplored in earlier publica tions In addition reviews have been included which discuss old topics from a new perspective Alcohol Intoxication and Withdrawal Milton Gross,2014-11-14 Selected Publications on Physiologic Concomitants of Alcohol Use and Abuse National Clearinghouse for Alcohol Information,1976 Biological/genetic Factors in Alcoholism Victor M. Hesselbrock,Edward G. Shaskan,Roger E. Meyer,1983 Recent Developments in Alcoholism Marc Galanter,2013-11-11 From the President of the Research Society on Alcoholism The field of alcohol research has been slowly but continuously evolving taking into its domain an ever increasing array of scientific disciplines This series is designed to fill the need for a review publication that covers the broad range of research into alcohol actions and alcoholism Research in alcohol concerns social epidemiological and legal concerns in addition to biomedical and behavioral topics to greater degree than research with many other drugs A publication devoted to alcohol research should serve the broadest existing research community but perhaps more important it should also provide a means to recruit new investigators with fresh approaches to the field We can and must demonstrate that legitimate high quality research is being done but we must also highlight the opportunity for new workers to make a real impact on the problem The Research Society on Alcoholism seeks to provide such a service not only through this publication but also through other activities Richard A Deitrich Ph D Regulation of Hepatic Metabolism K. Jungermann, F.C. Kauffman, R.G. Thurman, 2012-12-06 The liver is an exceptionally complex and diverse organ that functions both as an exocrine and an endocrine gland It secretes bile which contains many constituents in addition to bile salts and it synthesizes and releases many substances in response to the body's demands including prohormones albumin clotting factors glucose fatty acids and various lipoproteins It has a dual blood supply providing a rich mixture of nutrients and other absorbed substances via the portal vein and oxygen rich blood via the hepatic artery This functional heterogeneity is accompanied by cellular heterogeneity The liver contains many cell types including hepatic parenchymal cells Kupffer cells Ito cells and endothelial cells The most abundant cell type the parenchymal cells are biochemically and structurally heterogeneous The cells in the oxygen rich areas of the portal triad appear more dependent on oxidative metabolism whereas those around the central vein pericentral perivenous or centrilobular areas are more dependent upon an anaerobic mechanism Throughout this volume the latter three terms are used synonymously by various authors to indicate the five to eight layers of cells radiating from the central vein Structural and metabolic heterogeneity of hepatic parenchymal cells has been demonstrated by a variety of approaches including histochemical ultra structural and ultramicrobiochemical studies This microheterogeneity is linked to the physiological functions of the liver and its response to injurious substances DHHS Publication No. (ADM) , 1983
