

America's Families and Living Arrangements

Population Characteristics

2000

Issued June 2000

P20-537

INTRODUCTION

Since 1970, the composition of households and families and the marital status and living arrangements of adults in the United States both experienced marked changes. For example, the proportion of the population made up by married couples with children decreased, and the proportion of single mothers increased, while the median age at first marriage grew over time. Much of this variety has been regularly reported in two separate Census Bureau reports — Household and Family Characteristics and Marital Status and Living Arrangements.¹ Beginning with the March 2000 Current Population Survey, these two reports are being replaced by this new publication, America's Families and Living Arrangements.²

In addition to discussing basic trends about households, families, and living arrangements, this new report highlights characteristics of single-parent families, differences in the living arrangements of younger and older adults, and new data on unmarried-couple households.³

¹Data for the American Indian and Alaska Native population are not shown in this report because of the small sample size in the Current Population Survey, March 2000. Based on the March 2000 Current Population Survey, 3 percent of the Black population and 2 percent of the Asian and Pacific Islander population are of Hispanic origin.

A household contains one or more people — everyone living in a housing unit makes up a household. One of the people who own or rent the residence is designated as the householder. For the purposes of examining family and household composition, two types of households are defined: family and nonfamily.

A family household has at least two members related by blood, marriage, or adoption, one of whom is the householder.

A nonfamily household can be either a person living alone or a householder who shares the housing unit with nonrelatives only — for example, boarders or roommates. The nonrelatives of the householder may be related to each other.

Family households are maintained by married couples or by a man or woman living with other relatives — children may or may not be present. In contrast, nonfamily households are maintained only by men or women with no relatives at home.

Children include sons and daughters by birth, step-children, and adopted children of the householder regardless of the child's age or marital status. Own children differ from children in that they are never married and under age 18.

¹See Lynne M. Casper and Ken Bryson, Household and Family Characteristics: March 1998 (Supplement), Current Population Reports, P20-515, U.S. Census Bureau, Washington, DC, 1998; also, Terry A. Lugsilla, Marital Status and Living Arrangements: March 1998 (Supplement), Current Population Reports, P20-514, U.S. Census Bureau, Washington, DC, 1998.

²We gratefully acknowledge the effort and enthusiasm of Lynne Casper in reformatting and producing this report. Data previously shown for children in the two prior report series will be released annually in a future report focusing on children's living arrangements.
