In recent years, the percentage of non-US citizen international medical graduate (IMG) physicians matched for positions in psychiatry residency programs declined by half [1]. In 2017, there were a total of 1495 post-graduate year 1 (PGY-1) psychiatry positions in the National Residency Matching Program (NRMP) match; 137 positions were secured by visa-requiring IMGs (9.2%) [2]. This contrasts with 2008, when 1069 PGY-1 psychiatry positions were available and 201 were secured by visa-requiring IMGs (18.8%) [3]. This decline reflects the challenges faced by such applicants (Fig. 1).

Conversely, the number of visa-requiring psychiatry applicants has increased. There has been an increase in the number of psychiatry applicants from US allopathic schools, likely displacing IMGs. Moreover, the recent presidential executive order that suspended the entry of nationals from six Muslim majority countries, if allowed to stand, may cause the number of IMG candidates matching in psychiatry to further decline [4]. In 2014, the NRMP published match outcome data which showed 227 applicants from these countries were successfully matched across all disciplines [5]. According to Dr. William Pinsky, president and CEO of the Education Commission for Foreign Medical Graduates (ECFMG), approximately 850 applicants participating in the match of 2017 were from countries affected by the executive order [6].

Psychiatry and psychology departments in academic institutions in the USA have a long history of providing opportunities for IMGs. A large group of IMG psychiatrists arrived in the US post-World War II from a destabilized Europe. Eminent and influential psychiatrists immigrated to the USA and enhanced the quality and breadth of psychiatric education and care. The psychoanalytic movement was in its ascendancy in the USA and was strengthened by this influx of psychiatrists from other nations.

In subsequent decades, the American Psychiatry Association (APA) became a true multinational organization and currently represents physicians from almost 150 countries. The APA acknowledged the significant presence and vital contribution of IMGs as early as 1972 when the APA annual meeting was dedicated to the services of IMGs and called them “another of APA’s neglected minorities.”

IMGs trained in the USA are extremely influential and actively advance psychiatry in the USA and the world. In the last three decades, three APA presidents were IMGs. Several IMGs have made outstanding and enduring contributions to contemporary American psychiatry by playing important roles as leaders, academicians, researchers, and editors of peer review journals in psychiatry. The decline in IMGs in US residency programs represents a significant loss to the global psychiatry community since many non-US citizen IMG psychiatrists bridge the gap in education, clinical research, and development between the USA and their native countries [7].

In addition to IMG contributions to education and scholarship, IMGs provide an invaluable resource in the provision of care to the underserved. Most IMGs are admitted to the USA for residency training on J-1 visas sponsored by the ECFMG. After graduation, if they wish to continue to stay in the USA, most elect to work for at least 3 years in a visa waiver program in a medically underserved area, known as a Health Professional Shortage Area. Even in the absence of visa
