Living animal

The muscles of living Cypraea lutea from Atlantic Ocean environments off the western Cape Province (Fig. 115) were thin translucent beige and covered with beige or pink-black finger-like or conical papillae. The siphons of four individuals observed were all the colour of the muscle and could be expanded apically to become trumpet-like (Fig. 115). The off-white cephalic tentacles were denser and elongate. When viewed dorsally, the short translucent white foot was conspicuously widened anteriorly and narrowly rounded posteriorly; the thickened anterior rim was cream or beige.

Godwin & Lilford (1995: 99-103, 107, Figs 29-31, 156) illustrated and described the muscle complex, digestive system, central nervous system and reproductive system. The female reproductive system, central nervous system and radula are illustrated (Figs 148, 258, 268).

Shell

Shells of C. lutea are globular, often almost spherical, and range from 22 to 41 mm in length. Specimens from the Atlantic Ocean (Figs 113-114) may have a more produced anterior terminal and vary from opaque white to pale fawn, with few or no dorsal markings. Indian Ocean specimens, mainly from the Agulhas Bank (Figs 109-112) are more colourful, with densely spotted red or rust-brown dorsal markings. The broad labrum has a dull flesh and bears 17-25 fine denticles along the inner edge, which normally coalesce in fine riblets for several millimetres; the posteriormost and anteriormost lateral riblets most often attain the greatest length and in some cases, when viewed in dorsal aspect, protrude beyond the posterior tip of the labrum. The columellar peristome of subadult

C. lutea is finely denticulate; as the animal matures, a well-defined prosthemonial rim is secreted over most of the original denticles, leaving only faint denticles in their place. The columella is deeply convoluted and the poorly developed, rounded fissure is usually edentate; however, a single shell examined did possess four weak denticles. The narrow aperture is the same width throughout its length and is slightly curved posteriorly. Muscul-

Fashioning Inland Communities Yaari Felber-Seligman,2025 When viewed from the economic centers of the Indian or Atlantic Oceans the Ruvuma region of East Africa crossing what is now Tanzania Malawi and Mozambique would look like a periphery But the same factors that marginalize the region historically brought distinct opportunities In Fashioning Inland Communities Yaari Felber Seligman traces the long history from the first millennium CE into the twentieth century of Ruvuma trade practices within a changing world Felber Seligman argues that Ruvuma trade should be understood fundamentally as a set of voluntary choices undertaken and revised to further communities aspirations Ruvuma used fashion to build varied communities from local to pan regional reflecting the dynamic relationships among inland groups Examples of Ruvuma popular fashions reveal processes of meaning making and community building that call for us to expand our attention to the ways in which East African peoples interacted alongside as well as beyond trade networks that sourced prestige and commercial goods Popular culture here emerges as a heterarchical force that shaped lasting multidirectional connections across and between Ruvuma and their neighbors As both a subject and a strategy for analysis the history of popular fashion shifts how we view histories of small decentralized societies as they encounter larger economies Felber Seligman demonstrates that this has implications for our understanding not only of trade but of material culture community gender and family
