Pars 100 ,* Queenship and the Women of Westeros Zita Eva Rohr,Lisa Benz,2019-11-07 Is the world of George R R Martin s A Song of Ice and Fire and HBO s Game of Thrones really medieval How accurately does it reflect the real Middle Ages Historians have been addressing these questions since the book and television series exploded into a cultural phenomenon For scholars of medieval and early modern women they offer a unique vantage point from which to study the intersections of elite women and popular understandings of the premodern world This volume is a wide ranging study of those intersections Focusing on female agency and the role of advice it finds a wealth of continuities and contrasts between the many powerful female characters of Martin s fantasy world and the strategies that historical women used to exert influence Reading characters such as Daenerys Targaryen Cersei Lannister and Brienne of Tarth with a creative deeply scholarly eye Queenship and the Women of Westeros makes cutting edge developments in queenship studies accessible to everyday readers and fans Interphase Between Aging and Neurodegenerative Diseases Walter E. Müller,Anne Eckert,P. Hemachandra Reddy,2020-01-21 The purpose of this Research Topic is to discuss the latest developments in aging and neurodegenerative diseases Aging represents the major risk factor of the two most relevant neurodegenerative diseases Parkinson s disease PD and Alzheimer s disease AD It is generally accepted that symptoms of PD correlate with the severity of degeneration of dopaminergic substantia nigra neurons In most cases neuronal loss during aging is not sufficient to cause clinical symptoms but only leads to a preclinical state of PD However in a small number of our population neurodegeneration by aging gets accelerated by individual e g brain injuries environmental e g toxins and genetic e g mutations of the alpha synuclein gene factors to reach the critical threshold for clinical symptoms during lifetime Thus neurodegeneration in PD appears to represent the common final pathway of normal brain aging and all other risk factors including genetics and the accumulation of the neurotoxic alpha synuclein protein While aging alone is generally agreed to be sufficient for at least the preclinical state of PD the situation in AD seems to be different Aging as the major and well documented risk factor of AD has been neglected for decades Biochemical mechanisms of brain aging and the cognitive deficits of normal brain aging were seen as two not related and independent processes not related to AD AD has always been characterized for decades by the presence of histopathological alterations extracellular amyloid containing plaques and intracellular tangles of hyperphosphorylated tau protein by neurodegeneration synaptic deficits and finally neuronal loss as well as by severe cognitive deficits clinically often accompanied by neuropsychiatric symptoms like delusions as already described in the first famous patient Auguste D at the Psychiatric Hospital of Frankfurt If or if not one or both of the two histopathological hallmarks play a causative role remains unclear until now The discovery of homocytotic risk genes in most of the very rare probably less than 1% cases of early onset AD which share increased production of amyloid A as one but probably not the only one common property led to the hypothesis of A as the major causative factor for the development of AD It was neglected that plaques density in the brain of AD patients did not correlate with presence and severity of clinical symptoms while synaptic deficits did so even in first observations already published many years ago Based on the Amyloid hypothesis many drug treatments to remove A plaques were developed Even if all seemed to remove A to some extent all strategies failed to improve the symptoms of dementia Thus other concepts to explain the development of clinical symptoms of AD over time are needed These should include the brain aging process not only as a statistical but also as a causative contributing factor These concepts should not only rely on cell or animal models but should much more take into account the disease and the patients A closer look at the situation in PD will certainly be helpful
