INTRODUCTION

Because of high death rates in the United States due to motor vehicle (MV) accidents and violence—causes of death that disproportionately strike the young—the problem of premature death is truly an American tragedy. These two causes of death also are the major causes of the injuries that trauma centers were established to treat.

Some 20% of the deaths among injury victims who were treated at community hospitals could have been prevented if those patients had been taken to trauma centers instead. A trauma center offers the round-the-clock presence of an experienced trauma surgeon and the immediate availability of the key specialists—anesthesiologists and neurosurgeons—needed to provide definitive surgical treatment. But, the establishment of trauma centers does little good unless severely injured patients are brought to them instead of to other hospitals. The concept of a trauma system refers to the integration of pre-hospital emergency medical services (EMS), hospital care, and posthospitalization rehabilitation programs.

Hundreds of self-styled trauma centers have been established in the United States, and most states have at least initiated plans to develop trauma systems.

Health Care for an Aging Population Chris Hackler,1994-07-28 This volume examines one of the most important policy issues to be faced as policymakers address both current and future health care needs the allocation of health care resources for an aging population The first part looks at the role of the aged in society what justice requires of the young toward the old and of the old toward the young the source of rising health care costs and the need to control medical spending The second part focuses on dramatic and controversial proposals by Daniel Callahan and others to control medical spending in the next century by rationing life prolonging treatment according to age Concluding chapters provide concrete proposals for a system that solves our immediate problems of cost and access while preparing for the extraordinary needs of an aging population This book explores proposed changes in the U S health care system to meet unprecedented demand expected early in the next century when the baby boom generation reaches retirement age and eligibility for Medicare A focal point is the possibility of withholding publicly funded life prolonging medical care from the very old Alaska Bureau of Vital Statistics Annual Report ,1988 Annual Review of Nursing Research, Volume 12, 1994 Joyce J.
