

Mary Meyer,

Vermont's oldest stuffed toy company has given a big hug to Vermont's newest renewable energy source, Cow Power.

In 2009, Mary Meyer began to receive one hundred percent of it's energy from Vermont cows. We are supporting renewable energy and Vermont dairy farms that produce electricity with methane powered generators fueled by cow manure.

We have continued our commitment to expanding Earthmates™, our collection of environmentally friendly stuffed toys. About half our Earthmates line is made from organic cotton and bamboo. The remaining toys, known as Fuzz That Wuzz™, are made from recycled plastic bottles. Each toy helps keep over ten bottles out of landfills.

Click here to see how CVPS Cow Power works.

Make our toys a part of your green mooovement.

STEP 1

The digester is built to hold 21 days of farm waste at roughly 100°. Bacteria convert the waste into various products, one of which is methane gas. Gas produced by the bacteria builds up pressure in the concrete vessel, and a pipe delivers the biogas to a modified natural gas engine.

STEP 3

One cow's waste can produce enough electricity to light two 100-watt light bulbs 24 hours a day. The energy is fed onto the CVPS electrical system for distribution to customers.

STEP 5

How ENERGY HAPPENS

One cow can produce over 30 gallons of manure a day. 1,000 cows produce about 30,000 gallons of manure. All that manure can be turned into some serious profit for farmers generating Cow Power. The manure is fed into an anaerobic digester.

STEP 2

The biogas fuels the engine, which in turn spins an electric generator to create electricity. Waste heat from the engine is used to keep the digester warm, and offsets fuel purchases on the farm.

STEP 4

Digested manure is processed through a mechanical separator. The odorless solids can be used to replace sawdust or sand as bedding for the animals. Solids not used for bedding may be further processed and sold to the public.
