Three Seductive Ideas Jerome Kagan, 2000-04-07. Do the first two years of life really determine a child's future development? Are human beings like other primates, only motivated by pleasure? And do people actually have stable traits like intelligence, fear, anxiety, and temperament? This book, the product of a lifetime of research by one of the founders of developmental psychology, takes on the powerful assumptions behind these questions and proves them mistaken. Ranging with impressive ease from cultural history to philosophy to psychological research literature, Jerome Kagan weaves an argument that will rock the social sciences and the foundations of public policy. Scientists as well as lay people tend to think of abstract processes like intelligence or fear as measurable entities of which someone might have more or less. This approach in Kagan's analysis shows a blindness to the power of context and to the great variability within any individual subject to different emotions and circumstances. Infant determinism is another widespread and dearly held conviction that Kagan contests. This theory, with its claim that early relationships determine lifelong patterns, underestimates human resiliency and adaptiveness, both emotional and cognitive, and of course fails to account for the happy products of miserable childhoods and vice versa. The last of Kagan's targets is the vastly overrated pleasure principle, which he argues can hardly make sense of unselfish behavior impelled by the desire for virtue and self-respect, the wish to do the right thing. Written in a lively style that uses fables and fairy tales, history, and science to make philosophical points, this book challenges some of our most cherished notions about human nature.
