Developmental Psychobiology and Behavioral Ecology Elliott M. Blass, 2012-12-06 The previous volume in this series Blass 1986 focused on the interface between developmental psychobiology and developmental neurobiology The volume emphasized that an understanding of central nervous system development and function can be obtained only with reference to the behaviors that it manages and it emphasized how those behaviors in turn shape central development The present volume explores another natural interface of developmental psychobiology behavioral ecology It documents the progress made by developmental psychobiologists since the mid 1970s in identifying capacities of learning and conditioning in birds and mammals during the very moments following birth indeed during the antenatal period These breakthroughs in a field that had previously lain dormant reflect the need to meet the infant where it is in order for behavior to emerge Accordingly studies have been conducted at nest temperature infants have been rewarded by opportunities to huddle suckle or obtain milk behaviors that are normally engaged in the nest In addition there was rejection of the excessive deprivation extreme handling and traumatic manipulation studies of the 1950s and 1960s that yielded information on how animals could respond to trauma but did not reveal mechanisms of normal development In their place has arisen a series of analyses of how naturally occurring stimuli and situations gain control over behavior and how specifiable experiences impose limitations on subsequent development Constraints were identified on the range of interactions that remained available to developing animals as a result of particular events
