Johns,2017-09-16 Excerpt from Babylonian and Assyrian Laws Contracts and Letters The people who were so highly educated so deeply religious so humane and intelligent who developed such just laws and such permanent institutions are not unprofitable acquaintances A right thinking citizen of a modern city would probably feel more at home in ancient Babylon than in mediaeval Europe When we have won our way through the difficulties of the language and the writing to the real meaning of their purpose and come into touch with the men who wrote and spoke we greet brothers Rarely in the history of antiquity can we find so much of which we heartily approve so little to condemn The primitive virtues which we ascribe to ourselves that we have retained are far more in evidence than those primitive vices which we know are not extinct among us The average Babylonian strikes us as a just good man no wild savage but a law abiding citizen a faithful husband good father kind son firm friend industrious trader or careful man of business We know from other sources that he was no contemptible warrior no mean architect or engineer He might be an excellent artist modelling in clay carving rocks and painting walls His engraving of seals was superb His literary work was of high order His scientific attainments were considerable About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www.forgottenbooks.com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works
