

GIVING FEEDBACK TO AN UNDERPERFORMING EMPLOYEE

BACKGROUND When Steve began working for me a year ago, he had a great attitude and was performing at or above my expectations. Lately, I've noticed the quality of his work is slipping and he no longer meets team and individual goals. I've addressed it once before and haven't seen any improvement, so now it's time for a different approach.

GOAL Understand why Steve continues to underperform and have him take action to improve his performance.

EI BLUEPRINT

STRATEGIES USED Physiological (breathing); Emotional Connection; Relationships; Match and Validate.

OUTCOME Steve expected my usual "attack" strategy, sensing at some level, my frustration. When I chose to express support and empathy instead, he was more open and shared he was having problems at home and thought his work was unaffected and no one would notice. I did not pry but offered to help in any way I could. Steve asked for a flexible schedule for the next 4 to 6 weeks, and I agreed to do a trial for 2 weeks to see how it went. He thanked me profusely and apologized that his home life issues had leaked into his workplace performance. Soon after, I saw an improvement in Steve's performance.

STEP	WHAT TO DO
MAP	What are the emotions of you and others? I am frustrated with Steve because I gave him similar feedback in our last one on one. I am also annoyed he hasn't taken my advice for improving his performance. Steve seems to be confident in his abilities and seems unaware there is a problem. Steve may make excuses and act defensive and perhaps surprised when he learns that I still feel he is underperforming.
MATCH	What emotions are most helpful? I know my frustration and annoyance aren't helpful for the meeting. Instead, I will approach him with an open mind. I will practice deep listening and empathy trying to understand his point of view. I will stay positive but firm and provide him with candid feedback on his performance.
MEANING	What is the cause of these emotions? I think Steve wants to do a good job. I know he wants a promotion. There is a chance that Steve doesn't have the tools or the support that he needs to succeed. He may even be worried about his job and perhaps his confidence is covering how he really feels. There may even be something going on in his personal life impacting his performance.
MOVE	How will you sustain or move these emotions? I will manage my emotions during our conversation allowing me to share—calmly—I am frustrated. My calm demeanor may well get his attention. I will make observations and ask him for his view. I will ask open ended questions such as: What do you like about your job? What strengths do you bring to your job? What will help you do your job better? How can I support you to help you reach your goals? If he gets defensive, I will stay calm and try to get him to focus on positive steps he can take to improve his performance.
