

Always Something to Do in Salinas

EARLY MEMORIES of Salinas are so confused in my mind that I don't know, actually, what I remember and what I was told I remembered. I am fairly clear on the earthquake of 1906. My father took me down Main Street and I remember brick buildings, spilled outward. Our own wooden house was not injured, but the chimney had completely turned around without falling. And my sharpest memory is that a phonograph we had obtained by subscribing to the San Francisco Call for two years—our first talking machine—leaped from a shelf and destroyed itself. There were two thousand five hundred people in Salinas then, but boosters confidently predicted that it would someday be a metropolis of five thousand.

Tradition was strong in Salinas and my town never forgot nor forgave an injury. For example, in the Fourth of July hosecart race in 1900, run against Watsonville, the Salinas team ran out its hose smartly and with a substantial lead, then found to its horror that the threads of the coupling had been filed smooth. They could not couple up and get water and so lost the race. Watsonville had obviously cheated. For a decade after, a man could get a fight in a bar at any time simply by bringing up the subject. I thought of Watsonvillians as foreigners and cheats. I wouldn't have thought of trusting them.

The old Camino Real, the royal road that threaded California together, moved up the valley and did not come near Salinas for a very good reason. The place that was to become Salinas was a series of tule-grown swamps, which toward the end of the summer dried and left a

Mad at the World William Souder, 2020-10-13 Winner of the 2021 Los Angeles Times Book Prize for Biography A Publishers Weekly Best Book of 2020 in Nonfiction A resonant biography of America's most celebrated novelist of the Great Depression The first full length biography of the Nobel laureate to appear in a quarter century Mad at the World illuminates what has made the work of John Steinbeck an enduring part of the literary canon his capacity for empathy Pulitzer Prize finalist William Souder explores Steinbeck's long apprenticeship as a writer struggling through the depths of the Great Depression and his rise to greatness with masterpieces such as The Red Pony Of Mice and Men and The Grapes of Wrath Angered by the plight of the Dust Bowl migrants who were starving even as they toiled to harvest California's limitless bounty fascinated by the guileless decency of the downtrodden denizens of Cannery Row and appalled by the country's refusal to recognize the humanity common to all of its citizens Steinbeck took a stand against social injustice paradoxically given his inherent misanthropy setting him apart from the writers of the so called lost generation A man by turns quick tempered compassionate and ultimately brilliant Steinbeck could be a difficult person to like Obsessed with privacy he was mistrustful of people Next to writing his favorite things were drinking and womanizing and getting married which he did three times And while he claimed indifference about success his mid career books and movie deals made him a lot of money which passed through his hands as quickly as it came in And yet Steinbeck also took aim at the corrosiveness of power the perils of income inequality and the urgency of ecological collapse all of which drive public debate to this day Steinbeck remains our great social realist novelist the writer who gave the dispossessed and the disenfranchised a voice in American life and letters Eloquent nuanced and deeply researched Mad at the World captures the full measure of the man and his work
