- This step involves allocating a percentage of the investment amount to each of the main asset classes: cash, bonds, equity, property and offshore assets.
- The allocation depends on one's risk profile. Therefore a conservative investor will have less exposure to growth assets such as equities than a more aggressive investor.
- All investors, regardless of their risk profile, should have at least some exposure to all of the asset classes. Investors who stick to a diversified portfolio tend to do better over the long term.
