Aggression And Violence:

Psychobiology of Aggression and Violence Luigi Valzelli, 1981 Aggression and Violence David M. Stoff, Robert B. Cairns, 2014-02-04

Conceived at a time when biological research on aggression and violence was drawn into controversy because of sociopolitical questions about its study this volume provides an up to date account of recent biological studies performed mostly on humans A group of scientists recognized the importance of freedom of inquiry and deemed it vital to address the most promising biological research in the field The focus on biological mechanisms is not meant to imply that biological variables are paramount as a determinant of violence Rather biological variables operate in conjunction with other variables contributing to aggression or violence and a complete understanding of this phenomenon requires consideration of all influences bearing on it This book will familiarize readers with the rapidly growing and increasingly significant body of knowledge on the biological bases of human antisocial aggressive and violent behaviors The editors concentrated on biological influences that support the basic physiological and biochemical processes of the brain and did not cover those biological influences that impact on the health of the individual such as head injury pregnancy and birth complications diet and exposure to lead and other toxins They focused on biological influences to illuminate their role in the complex behavioral phenomenon of violence Three different approaches to the biological study of human antisocial aggressive and violent behaviors are represented genetic neurobiological and biosocial Representing each of these three approaches individual chapters from investigators in psychobiology biological psychiatry and basic clinical neurosciences address the most recent experimental findings methods theory and common misconceptions in the biological study of aggression and violence The areas of primary focus are behavior and molecular genetics neurochemistry and hormones neuroimaging psychophysiology and developmental psychobiology Generally speaking investigators following these different approaches have experience in different scientific backgrounds select different methods generate different analyses employ different conceptual definitions for some of the same terms and assume a different philosophical stance in attempting to explain violence Nevertheless all are united in their efforts to understand the biological underpinnings of violence This book then assumes a comprehensive approach wherein different levels of analysis and different approaches inform each other It is clear from the studies reported that aggression and violence are multidetermined phenomena and understanding them requires an interdisciplinary approach spanning economic sociopolitical psychological sociological and criminological as well as biomedical considerations Nature biology and nurture experience context are fundamentally inseparable in explaining aggression and violence biology may affect experience or context but experience or context also influences biology Both need to be studied in a search for explanations of this phenomena

Violence Irwin L. Kutash, Samuel B. Kutash, Louis B. Schlesinger, 1978 Child to Parent Aggression and Violence Hue San Kuay, Graham Towl, 2021-06-09 Parent directed aggression and violence by children is a complex issue and may not be explained by focusing upon a single factor The affected parents tend to delay seeking help from professionals due to not knowing where to seek help or even an inability to identify their experiences as a problem This book provides parents and professionals with the much needed information to tackle this incidence In this book Hue San Kuay and Graham Towl draw upon the evidence from past studies and case examples to describe the occurrence of child to parent aggression and violence and highlight the roles by individuals and communities in intervening and preventing aggression and violence The nature versus nurture debate is included and callous unemotional traits are explained as a predictor of aggression The effect of parent directed aggression is discussed and prevention and intervention methods are
