Aging A Natural History:

Aging Robert E. Ricklefs, Caleb Ellicott Finch, 1995 The process of aging is familiar to and usually dreaded by all of us We all know what it feels like to grow older but what exactly is aging why does it happen and can anything be done to slow or prevent it An original treatment of human aging that draws on biomedical research and the natural history of animals and plants Aging A Natural History describes this biological phenomenon in fascinating detail helping the reader to understand its complex processes In the aging patterns of humans and many other species biologists Robert E Ricklefs and Caleb E Finch find some answers to why aging must exist at all and why it is so spectacularly different in different species The authors ask a variety of compelling questions How can processes that lead to death be such an integral part of life itself Why do some species tend to die at an early age when close relatives may live much longer Why do many species age when others seem not to And perhaps most importantly why is aging which is so detrimental to the individual maintained by natural selection Finally the authors consider the prospects for prolonging human life and improving the quality of life at older ages Concluding that aging is induced both by environmental factors and by the biochemical processes normally present in all cells they show aging to be an inevitable yet alterable part of life a natural process that may limit activity but is not necessarily debilitating

Genetics and Evolution of Aging Michael R. Rose, Caleb E. Finch, 2013-03-09 Aging is one of those subjects that many biologists feel is largely unknown Therefore they often feel comfortable offering extremely facile generalizations that are either unsupported or directly refuted in the experimental literature Despite this unfortunate precedent aging is a very broad phenomenon that calls out for integration beyond the mere collecting together of results from disparate laboratory organisms With this in mind Part One offers several different synthetic perspectives The editors Rose and Finch provide a verbal synthesis of the field that deliberately attempts to look at aging from both sides the evolutionary and the molecular The articles by Charlesworth and Clark both provide population genetic perspectives on aging the former more mathematical the latter more experimental Bell takes a completely different approach arguing that aging may not be the result of evolutionary forces Bell's model instead proposes that aging could arise from the progressive deterioration of chronic host pathogen interactions This is the first detailed publication of this model It marks something of a return to the type of aging theories that predominated in the 1950's and 1960's theories like the somatic mutation and error catastrophe theories We hope that the reader will be interested by the contrast in views between the articles based on evolutionary theory and that of Bell MR Rose and C E Finch eds Genetics and Evolution of Aging 5 12 1994 1994 Kluwer Academic Publishers The Journal of uniform genetics of aging 2 Michael R Rose Caleb E An Introduction to the History of Human Development and Family Science
