Swihart, Jeffrey E. Moore, 2004 Habitat loss and fragmentation arguably pose the greatest threats to biological diversity Agriculture is a dominant land use that along with urban sprawl and residential development can reduce the amount and connectedness of natural areas required by many native species Unfortunately progress has been slow in integrating nature and biodiversity protection into community planning in intensively farmed regions especially in America's heartland. Seldom do issues related to species conservation receive consideration during local planning activities. Lack of progress stems partly from scientific inadequacies in understanding the dynamics of complex landscapes and from a lack of engagement of non scientific stakeholders by scientists and modelers. The result of these shortcomings is a critical disconnect of conservation issues from the planning infrastructure. This book provides a blueprint for advancing conceptual understanding of conservation in agricultural regions. It accomplishes this with a two pronged approach: first by developing spatially structured models that acknowledge the link between socio economic drivers of land use change and the dynamics of species occupying agricultural landscapes with abrupt changes in land cover i.e. sharp edges; and second by providing guidelines and examples to enable scientists to effectively engage stakeholders in participatory learning and planning activities that integrate biodiversity with other more traditional considerations. The structure of the book is truly interdisciplinary, linking the efforts of ecologists, economists, statisticians, mathematicians and land use specialists.
