

CHAPTER 1 INTRODUCTION OF ECONOMICS

DEFINITION OF ECONOMICS

- a social science that deals with the efficient allocation of scarce resources to satisfy unlimited human wants and needs.
- It is a social science concerned with the production, distribution, and consumption of goods and services. It studies how individuals, businesses, governments, and nations make choices about how to allocate scarce resources.
- Basic assumption in studying economics is to allocate scarce resources.
- Efficient allocation of scarce resources – proper allocation of the limited resources.
- Wants and needs are two different ideas. Generally, an individual can live without wants but he or she cannot live without needs.
- Resources are classified as capital, land, labor, and entrepreneurship.
 - Land resources include natural resources such as land itself, mineral deposits, water, air, climate, and wildlife.
 - Labor resources refer to the physical and mental capacity of man to work in order to produce goods and services.
 - Capital resources, on the other hand, include man-made goods that produce other goods like buildings, tools, equipment, and machineries as well as improvements on land that increase the productive capacity to produce other goods and services.
 - Entrepreneurship involves human resources that perform the functions of organizing, managing, and assembling the other factors of production and making business policy decisions. The entrepreneur is a risk-taker and an innovator.

Two major areas in the study of economics

- Macroeconomics
Considers the aggregate performance of all markets in the market system and is concerned with the choices made by the large subsectors of the economy—the household sector, which includes all consumers; the business sector, which includes all firms; and the government sector, which includes all government agencies; and the foreign sector which include activities related to export and import of goods, and the flow of capital between the domestic economy and rest of the world.

- Microeconomics
 - examines the factors that influence individual economic choices and how the choices of various decision makers (individual consumers, firm or industry, and government agency) are coordinated by markets.
- basic unit of economic analysis.

MICROECONOMICS VS MACROECONOMIC
Differences	Microeconomics	Macroeconomics
Subject	Microeconomics is the study of economic activities of individuals and small groups of individuals.	Macroeconomics studies the economy as a whole and not a single unit but combination of all.

Objective	Its broad aim is to maximize utility, whereas the main aim is to maximize the growth of national income.	Full employment, price stability, economic growth and development, balance of payments.
Unit	Each individual which operates independently of demand and supply forces.	National income, output and employment which are determined by aggregate demand and aggregate supply.

- SCARCITY - refers to resources being finite and limited. There is a scarcity in all types of resources: human resources, natural resources, capital resources.
Because we have scarce resources, we need to have a choice.
