INTRODUCTION

In the late 1800s, Pfeffer, Englemann, and others demonstrated that the movements of bacteria are purposeful: that bacteria avoid inhospitable environments and accumulate in favorable ones. These early studies of bacterial behavior are described in a review by Berg (1). More recently, Adler (2) showed that motile strains of Escherichia coli can move toward or away from many kinds of chemicals. Chemotaxis in E. coli is formally analogous to more sophisticated behaviors in higher organisms, and yet affords the experimental advantages of a microbial system. Judging from the Principles of Genetic Toxicology David Brusick, 2012-12-06 The field of genetic toxicology is a relatively new one which grew out of the studies of chemical mutagenesis and modern toxicology Considering that systematic practices to detect chemical mutagenesis are only a little over thirty years old this field has evolved very rapidly with an abundance of methods for identifying chemical mutagens To evaluate the usefulness of the methods and to select the assay which will yield the most important information under practical conditions requires the broad experience such as that which Dr Brusick has acquired over the last decade Since this field is expanding very rapidly and new test ing methods are being recognized it should be kept in mind that revisions may have to be made during the next five to ten years The need for such a book has been obvious to us particularly since training courses and workshops on genetic toxicology are being organized which find it beneficial to utilize established guidelines and since the reports in the literature do not always describe in detail how the work was carried out during laboratory testing In addition to his broad background in genetics Dr Brusick has had much practical experience having organized and directed the most extensive laboratory for mutagen testing I am most pleased to see this volume for which there is an ever increasing need Alexander Hollaender Associated Universities Inc 1717

Milunsky, 2013-11-11 The law is a mandate and a mirror it both commands and reflects It should not come as a shock that scientists and physicians often prefer the mirror at times when society seems to be demanding a mandate This may be especially true in the rapidly advancing field of medical genetics where recent discoveries leading to potentially startling applications have raised old questions of law in a new light Nevertheless we believe that in general the conflict between the law and science as illustrated in the field of genetics is embroi dered with exaggeration The Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court Warren Burger has noted that the prime function of the law is to protect basic human values individual human values sometimes even at the expense of scientific progress and that it is not the function of the law to keep pace with science While both of these statements are true as far as they go we believe the law must make an affirmative effort to anticipate scientific developments so that those beneficial to society can be nurtured rather than stultified It was to nurture cooperation and understanding that we brought together a distinguished faculty of internationally known experts on law and genetics to discuss their fields in 1975 The Virus Cancer Program National Cancer Institute (U.S.).
