Correspondence Models Of Letter Writing:

Correspondence Roger Chartier, Alain Boureau, Cécile Dauphin, 1997 In this book Roger Chartier and his associates explore the history of a cultural practice that has become common and widespread the writing of letters They begin by examining the invention of norms for writing letters in the Middle Ages and the fixing of these norms in popular manuals of various kinds They then analyse the letter writing models developed in the ancien regime showing how these models were linked to court literature on the one hand and to the popular books distributed by pedlars on the other Finally they discuss the models of letter writing developed during the nineteenth century The nineteenth century they argue was a decisive period in the history of letter writing partly because of the rapid rise in rates of literacy and partly due to broader social and economic transformations which increased the need for writing letters By exploring the ways in which practices of letter writing have changed over the centuries this path breaking book sheds light on an everyday cultural practice which has created new ways of thinking of feeling and of relating to others as well as to oneself
