Containers suitable for bonsai fall into two main categories: the training container and the display pot. Training containers are used when the tree is in an early stage of development and are for styling when the tree is in a mature but untrained state or a further refinement. The depth of the pot is important in the distance of the trunk just above the soil level. The appearance of pots is too well known to need further requirements.

Display pots containing several trees have to be made to be completely square. It won't be necessary to find pots with rounded, oval, and so on, to display a balanced relationship between pot and tree. Always be consistent in the
