Coping with Life Crises Rudolf Moos, 1986-02-28 This book examines new developments in the area of human competence and coping behavior. It sets forth a conceptual framework that considers the interplay between environmental contexts and personal resources and their impact on how individuals cope with life transitions and crises. The selections cover the tasks confronted in varied life crises and describe the coping strategies employed in managing them. The material identifies the long term effects of such life events as divorce and bereavement as well as the way in which these stressors can promote personal growth and maturity. The book contains a broad selection of recent literature on coping and adaptation integrative commentaries that provide the background for each of the areas as well as conceptual linkages among them and an introductory overview that presents a general perspective on human competence and coping. Illustrative case examples are included. Stress Mortimer H. Appley, Richard A. Trumbull, 2012-12-06 It was our privilege some twenty years ago to assemble a group of Canadian and American investigators to examine the status of research in the then newly burgeoning field of psychological stress Appley Trumbull 1967 As noted in Chapter 1 of the present volume there has been rapid development of the area since then The conference on which the current volume is based was designed to do three things 1 to further update the field 2 to bring European and other perspectives to the subject and 3 to focus on the status of theory of stress We believe the reader will agree that all three objectives were accomplished though in so vast and active a field one can never be totally satisfied The authors included in this volume are among the leading investigators in the field They represent active research centers and programs in Austria East and West Germany Great Britain Israel Sweden and the United States Their chapters make contributions to stress theory and methodology inform us meaningfully of the perspectives of the various research programs they represent and provide collectively a description of the dynamics of the stress process as currently emerging

A Clinical Guide to the Treatment of the Human Stress Response George S. Everly Jr., 2012-12-06 In 1981 Plenum Press published a text entitled The Nature and Treatment of the Stress Response by Robert Rosenfeld M D and me That text attempted to do what no other text from a major publisher had previously attempted that is to create a clinically practical guide for the treatment of excessive stress and its arousal related syndromes this to be captured between the same covers in combination with a detailed clinically relevant pedagogy on the neurological and endocrinological foundations of the stress response itself That volume has enjoyed considerable success having found markets among practicing professionals and clinical students as well The fields of psychosomatic medicine health psychology behavioral medicine and applied stress research have appreciably expanded their boundaries since the publication of the aforementioned volume Although remarkably little of the clinical utility of that volume has been eroded with time it was felt that an updated and more integrative clinical textbook needed to be offered to practicing clinicians and students within clinical rather than simply create a second edition of training programs Therefore was made to create a significantly revised the original volume the decision and expanded volume that would cover many of the same topics as the original volume but would provide a primary emphasis on the treatment of excessive stress and that would employ an integrative phenomenological model to facilitate that end This present volume entitled A Clinical Guide to the Treatment of the Human Stress Response is the result

Coping with Negative Life Events C.R. Snyder, Carol E. Ford, 2013-06-29 Like a Bridge over Troubled Waters The surge of current interest in the interface between clinical and social psychology is well illustrated by the publication of a number of general texts and journals in this area and the growing emphasis in graduate programs on providing training in both disciplines Although the benefits of an integrated clinical social approach have been recognized for a number of years the recent work in this area has advanced from the theoretical extrapolations of social psychological models to clinical issues to theory and research that is based on social principles and conducted in clinical domains It is becoming increasingly common to find social psychologists pursuing research with clinical populations and clinical psychologists investigating variables that have traditionally been in the realm of social psychology A major area of interface between the two disciplines is in research and theory concerned with how individuals respond to negative events In addition to the trend toward an integrated clinical social approach the growing body of literature in this area reflects the explosion of current interest in the area of health psychology work by clinical and social psychologists on the topics of stress and coping has been one of the major facets of this burgeoning field The purpose of the present volume is to provide a common forum for recent advances in the clinical and social literature on responses to negative life outcomes

Human Adaptation to Extreme Stress John P. Wilson,Zev Harel,Boaz Kahana,2013-11-11 This book is one additional indication that a new field of study is emerging within the social sciences if it has not emerged already Here is a sampling of the fruit of a field whose roots can be traced to the earliest medical writings in Kahun Papyrus in 1900 B C In this document according to Ilza Veith the earliest medical scholars described what was later identified as hysteria This description was long before the 1870s and 1880s when Charcot speculated on the etiology of hysteria and well before the first use of the term traumatic neurosis at the turn of this Century Traumatic stress studies is the investigation of the immediate and long term psychosocial consequences of highly stressful events and the factors that affect those consequences This definition includes three primary elements event consequences and causal factors affecting the perception of both This collection of papers addresses all three elements and collectively contributes to our understanding and appreciation of the struggles of those who have endured so much often with little recognition of their experiences

Continuing Bonds Dennis Klass, Phyllis R. Silverman, Steven Nickman, 2014-05-12 First published in 1996 This new book gives voice to an emerging consensus among bereavement scholars that our understanding of the grief process needs to be expanded The dominant 20th century model holds that the function of grief and mourning is to cut bonds with the deceased thereby freeing the survivor to reinvest in new relationships in the present Pathological grief has been defined in terms of holding on to the deceased Close examination reveals that this model is based more on the cultural values of modernity than on any substantial data of what people actually do Presenting data from several populations 22 authors among the most respected in their fields demonstrate that the health resolution of grief enables one to maintain a continuing bond with the deceased Despite cultural disapproval and lack of validation by professionals survivors find places for the dead in their on going lives and even in their communities Such bonds are not denial the deceased can provide resources for enriched functioning in the present Chapters examine widows and widowers bereaved children parents and siblings and a population previously excluded from bereavement research adoptees and their birth parents Bereavement in Japanese culture is also discussed as are meanings and implications of this new model of grief Opening new areas of research and scholarly dialogue this work provides the basis for significant developments in clinical practice in the field

Understanding Loss Judith Murray, 2015-09-16 Loss and consequent grief permeates nearly every life changing event from death to health concerns to dislocation to relationship breakdown to betrayal to natural disaster to faith issues Yet while we know about particular events of loss independently we know very little about a psychology of loss that draws many adversities together This universal experience of loss as a concept in its own right sheds light on so much of the work we do in the care of others This book develops a new overarching framework to understand loss and grief taking into account both pathological and wellbeing approaches to the subject Drawing on international and cross disciplinary research Judith Murray highlights nine common themes of loss helping us to understand how it is experienced These themes are then used to develop a practice framework for structuring assessment and intervention systematically Throughout the book this generic approach is highlighted through discussing its use in different loss events such as bereavement trauma chronic illness and with children or older people Having been used in areas as diverse as child protection palliative care and refugee care the framework can be tailored to a range of needs and levels of care Caring for people experiencing loss is an integral part of the work of helping professions whether it is explicitly part of their work such as in counselling or implicit as in social work nursing teaching medicine and community work This text is an important guide for anyone working in these areas Successful Aging Paul Boris Baltes,Margret M. Baltes,1993-05-28 More and more people live into old age This demographic revolution underscores the fact that old age is the last uncharted and unattended phase of the life cycle Health Psychology Edward P. Sarafino,Timothy W. Smith,2014-01-13 Sarafino draws from the research and theory of many disciplines in order to show psychologists how psychology and health affect each other Helping the Bereaved College Student David E.
