Drennan, 2021-09-30 Over 30 years after the end of the Cold War military tensions have returned to Europe Both the North Atlantic Treaty Organization NATO and Russia are boosting their deployments in close proximity to one another and in multiple domains At the same time a host of new or dramatically improved conventional capabilities have been fielded introducing a significant level of uncertainty into the security environment Meanwhile political and military to military relations are at a post Cold War low with communication as the exception not the norm and the structure of interaction created by arms control and confidence and security building measures almost entirely collapsed Through a combination of interviews workshops and structured analysis on the causes of potential conflict the authors of this report outline new conventional arms control CAC measures to lower the risk of conflict in Europe Although it once served as a cornerstone of European security the current regional CAC regime is outdated and largely irrelevant to today's challenges Rather than starting with the existing agreements the authors begin with an investigation of the catalysts of possible conflict and build arms control policy options on that basis How might specific changes in behavior posture presence technology or capabilities and varying perceptions thereof drive conflict What capabilities or combination of capabilities are destabilizing and why And what CAC measures could be used to address these risks The authors use the answers to these questions to suggest a menu of options for a new CAC regime that could address the regional security challenges of the 21st century Arms Control and European Security Stephen J Blank, Louis H Jordan, 2025-05-22 The following three papers comprise one of the panels from a conference on U S Russia relations that SSI co sponsored with the Carnegie Council at Pocantico NY from June 13 2011

Carnegie Council's Program on U.S. Global Engagement: A Two Year Retrospective. The papers offer three contrasting looks at one of the major issues in today's arms control agenda: namely the future of the Conventional Forces in Europe Treaty (CFE). The three papers were written by leading experts in the field from the United States, the United Kingdom, and Russia, and provide a revealing glimpse into the very different assessments that are being made by those three governments and the difficult issues involved in attempting to regenerate the process that led to the original treaty in 1990. These three chapters also implicitly contribute to a better understanding of the intractabilities facing the major players in any effort to advance not only arms control but also European stability.
