Forgotten Heroes of American Education J. Wesley Null, Diane Ravitch, 2006-01-01 This book is titled Forgotten Heroes of American Education because it contains representative writings by significant educators who challenged mainstream thinking The editors of this volume believe that the work of these thoughtful and important educators deserves to be remembered They have been forgotten because in the great pedagogical battles of the twentieth century they lost Time and again they battled with their Progressivist colleagues over the purpose and goals of elementary and secondary education Because they lost the arguments their role as leaders and thinkers was almost completely ignored by historians of education who identified with the winners We think this was a grand mistake To honor the legacy of these eight educators we have written this book and entitled it Forgotten Heroes of American Education

Should We Stop Teaching Art Charles Robert Ashbee, 1978 Universities and the Public Sphere Brian Pusser, Ken Kempner, Simon Marginson, Imanol Ordorika, 2012-05-22 Universities have been propelled into the center of the global political economy of knowledge production by a number of factors mass education academic capitalism the globalization of knowledge the democratization of communication in the era of the Internet and the emergence of the knowledge and innovation economy The latest book in the International Studies in Higher Education series Universities and the Public Sphere addresses the vital role of research universities as global public spheres sites where public interaction conversation and deliberation take place where the nature of the State and private interests can be openly debated and contested At a time of increased privatization open markets and government involvement in higher education the book also addresses the challenges facing the university in its role as a global public sphere In this volume international contributors challenge prevalent views of the global marketplace to create a deeper understanding of higher education's role in knowledge creation and nation building In nearly every national context the pressures of globalization neo liberal economic restructuring and new managerial imperatives challenge traditional norms of autonomy academic freedom access and affordability The authors in Universities and the Public Sphere argue that universities are uniquely suited to have transformative democratic potential as global public spheres

The Logic of China's New School Reforms Qiquan Zhong, 2021-10-25 This is a collection of essays on China's new curriculum reforms in basic education covering various aspects of the reforms ranging from education theory to classroom activity transformation from teacher training to teaching quality evaluation Prof Zhong presents rich experiences in the reforms in the last decade as collisions between old ideas and new ones marking the end of the Kairov Era pedagogy This book discusses profound changes in China's basic education propelled by both top down designs and bottom up innovations from grass root teachers

Curriculum or Craftsmanship Harry L. Gracey, 1972-07-01 Sociologist Harry L. Gracey spent two years studying an East Coast school system which he calls Brookview and determined that the bureaucratic social structure of schools can have a profound and irreversibly negative effect on the creativity of teachers This volume tells the story of the Wilbur Wright elementary school in Brookview It examines the relationship between the educational institution as a bureaucracy and the goals of the two main types of teaching orientation found in elementary schools such as Wright. The majority of teachers are production oriented. They believe that their job is to see that the children in their charge complete as much of the standardized grade level curriculum as possible during the school year. They do achieve some success in preparing children for life in a society where bureaucracy is the dominant form of social organization. The other significant type of teaching orientation is that of the craftsmen. These instructors see their goal as the development of each individual's learning potential with the curriculum built upon the specific needs and interests of each child. Bureaucratic school structures do nothing to promote this kind of teaching. Any ideas that are at variance with the school's organizational structure will fail. The craftsman teachers do not have the time to communicate the standardized programs desired by the school board and also to make use of their own individualistic techniques. Further, the continued use of the former cancels the effects of the craftsman approach. In delineating his conclusions, Professor Gracey includes his observations on the community and educational setting of the study, the two types of teachers, the administration, the parents, and the children's response to educational organization. This study is unique in approaching its educational subject matter from a sociological point of view. Professor Gracey intended it as a study of behavior in organizations. It should also serve educational goals, however, and will therefore interest educators and concerned citizens as well as sociologists.
