Arkansas Times, 1998 History of Arkansas Arkansas Times, 1994 One of the most entertaining Arkansas histories was put together during the Great Depression by a group of writers and photographers through a government made work program called the Arkansas Writers Project These days a different Arkansas Writers Project is a private publishing company in Little Rock which for 20 years has published the Arkansas Times first as a monthly magazine and now as a weekly newspaper The only connection between the two Writers Projects is one of spirit the original writers group back in the 1930s chronicles both the history of the state and contemporary affairs in Arkansas with an enthusiasm and with an attention to telling details and unusual characters that were missing in the more formal history volumes Now the Arkansas Writers Project of the 1990s has compiled a history of the state in the same anecdotal spirit with a rich selection of historical articles from the hundreds that have appeared in the Arkansas Times in the past two decades If you don't know why Arkansas has been called the Wonder State you'll discover why in Arkansas Times A History of Arkansas in Stories and Pictures The

Jonesboro and Arkansas's Historic Northeast Corner Ray Hanley, Diane Hanley, 2002-02-25 Join Ray and Diane Hadley as they retell the history of the communities that make up Jonesboro and Arkansas's Northeast Corner in vintage images When Union soldiers returned North after the Civil War they brought home stories of a sparsely populated area with bountiful timber and potential for homes and farms Over the next 50 years first by wagon train and then by railroads settlers came to build not only homes and farms but also thriving communities in the Clay Greene and Craighead counties of northeastern Arkansas Today visitors and residents of the area see the bustle of Jonesboro and the thriving Arkansas State
