13th Floor:

The 13th Floor Drac Von Stoller, 2024-08-07 The Zenith loomed before me a monolithic testament to human ambition and architectural audacity Its glass and steel facade pierced the skyline like a defiant obelisk daring the heavens themselves As I stood at its base craning my neck to glimpse its summit a chill ran down my spine despite the warm summer evening Impressive isn't it A voice startled me from my reverie I turned to see a man in his sixties his silver hair neatly combed his suit impeccable I'm Harold Weiss the building manager You must be the new structural engineer I nodded extending my hand James Parker Pleased to meet you Mr Weiss His grip was firm but his hand was ice cold Please call me Harold Shall we begin the tour As we entered the lobby I couldn't shake the feeling of being watched The high ceilings and polished marble floors seemed to amplify every sound our footsteps echoing ominously The Zenith has quite a reputation I ventured trying to break the uncomfortable silence Harold's lips curved into a thin smile Oh And what have you heard I hesitated not wanting to offend my new client Well there are rumors about its unique design The missing thirteenth floor for instance Harold's eyes narrowed almost imperceptibly Ah yes A common superstition in architecture We simply skipped the number Nothing more We reached the elevators and Harold pressed the call button As we waited I noticed something odd about the panel The button for the thirteenth floor is missing I observed Harold's smile didn't reach his eyes As I said we skipped it Shall we start with the lower levels As we toured the building I couldn't shake the feeling that something was off The temperature seemed to fluctuate wildly between floors and more than once I caught glimpses of movement in my peripheral vision only to find empty hallways when I turned Harold I said as we reached the twelfth floor I can't help but notice some irregularities in the building's design The temperature variations for instance Harold's face remained impassive Old buildings have their quirks Mr Parker Nothing to be concerned about I pressed on And the original blueprints I'd like to review them if possible For a moment I thought I saw a flicker of fear in Harold's eyes But it was gone so quickly I might have imagined it I'm afraid those were lost in a fire years ago he said smoothly But I assure you everything is up to code As we stepped onto the fourteenth floor a wave of cold air hit me like a physical force I shivered involuntarily Good God it's freezing up here I muttered Harold seemed unfazed Is it I hadn't noticed Perhaps we should check the thermostat As we walked down the corridor the lights began to flicker A low distant hum filled the air growing louder with each step What's that sound I asked my unease growing Harold cocked his head listening I don't hear anything Mr Parker Are you feeling alright Before I could respond a blood curdling scream echoed through the hallway I spun around heart pounding Did you hear that I gasped Harold's face remained eerily calm Hear what Mr Parker Perhaps we should conclude our tour for today You seem tired
