

The Basic Dry Fly Hackle Collar— Traditional Method

The traditional method for creating a basic hackle collar is simple, and it makes a perfectly good fly that will catch fish. Stick with it if you like. The method I use has come to me over years of production tying and display-fly tying. With it I have created my richest, most elegant hackle collars. Regarding fish-catching qualities of the two methods, I doubt there is any difference. Here is the traditional method for creating a basic hackle collar:

1. Tie in two prepared hackles by their stems at the rear of the hook area. Trim the stems and bind them with thread. Advance the thread to about 1/16" behind the hook's eye.

2. Clamp your hackle pliers onto the tip of one hackle and wind that hackle in tight, close turns to the thread's end. Secure the hackle's tip with three tight turns of thread. Remove the hackle pliers from the hackle's tip.

3. Wind the second hackle through the first. As you wind the second hackle, zig zag it back and forth to allow trapped fibers to escape.

4. Secure the tip of the second hackle as you did the tip of the first. Trim both tips closely, and then build a thread head (see "The Thread Head" in section K, "Basic Techniques").

The Basic Dry Fly Hackle Collar— My Method

Here is my method for creating a basic hackle collar:

1. Wrap a layer of thread from 1/16" behind the eye to just short of midhook, and then wrap the thread forward to just short of the center of the first thread layer. These thread wraps help you gauge the wing and hackle locations. Tie in the wing stem. (The first thread layer should be longer if you desire a wider hackle collar, shorter if you desire a slimmer one.)

2. With the body, tail, and wing complete, secure the first hackle atop the hook with several tight turns of thread. The hackle should be on its edge, but angling forward on the near side of the hook, tip end angling back on the far side, cupped face (the concave side) to the rear.

3. Secure the second hackle beneath the hook with several tight turns of thread. The hackle should be on its edge, but angling forward on the far side of the hook, tip end angling back on the near side, cupped face again to the rear.

4. Work the thread forward, toward the hook's eye, binding the hackles' stems. Guide the stem from the top hackle down the near side of the hook, guide the bottom hackle's stem underneath and in line with the stem. Trim the top hackle's stem when it reaches down alongside and below the near wing, trim the end of the stem at an angle for a tapered cut. Continue wrapping the thread forward over the bottom hackle's stem. Just ahead of the wings, trim the bottom hackle's stem at an angle. Continue wrapping the thread to about 1/16" behind the eye.

TYING IN, TRIMMING, AND BINDING HACKLE STEMS

5. Clamp the jaws of your hackle pliers well down onto the top hackle's tip. Begin wrapping the top hackle forward leaving a thin space between turns. Leave a thin space between the hackle and the rear of the wings; then increase the angle of the hackle's stem as you bring it down the far side of the wings, beneath the hook, and then right up against the front of the wings. Continue wrapping the hackle forward; now you can decrease the spaces between turns.

Secure the hackle's tip atop the hook's shank with three tight thread turns, just behind the eye. Closely trim the stem and any projecting fibers (or you can trim the tip when you trim the second hackle's tip).
