Alone A Fascinating Study Of Those Who Have Survived Long Solitary Ordeals:

Alone Richard D. Logan, 1993 Charles Lindbergh endured 33 hours of flying without sleep to become the first aviator to cross the Atlantic alone Eleven year old Terry Jo Duperrault survived four days at sea drifting on a tiny life raft after her family was murdered by the skipper of their chartered boat Admiral Richard Byrd struggled through nearly five months of winter darkness alone in a hut hurried in the ice of Antarctica Mountaineer Joe Simpson suffered a devastating fall high in the Andes then spent three days crawling back to camp with a broken leg Where did these people find the strength and courage to conquer seemingly insurmountable physical and psychological challenges Does everyone have what it takes to face such ordeals What insights into the mysteries of the human mind can such survival experiences provide In searching for the answers to such questions Richard Logan Does more than relay the fascinating stories of these and other truly courageous people In their gripping first hand accounts he finds a powerful metaphor for all individuals seeking to find their way in the world

Current perspectives on the mechanisms of auditory hallucinations in clinical and non-clinical populations Johanna C. Badcock, Frank Larøi, Paul Allen, Kelly M. Diederen, 2014-03-07 There has been a recent surge of interest in auditory hallucinations AH in schizophrenia compared to those experienced by non clinical i.e. healthy individuals This interest stems in no small part from a keen awareness of the fact that progress in developing more effective treatments for AH in psychosis has been seriously hampered by our limited understanding of the cognitive and biological mechanisms involved The prevailing notion that AH in clinical and non clinical populations share the same features and underlying mechanisms the continuum hypothesis has been seriously challenged by a growing list of differences as well as similarities between these groups At the phenomenological level this is exemplified in the highly negative content of AH in patients and the markedly earlier age of onset of AH in non patients Similarly several recent studies point to significant differences in cognition language lateralization and possibly dopamine function between these groups These findings have important implications for the design of future studies and raise considerable doubt about the adequacy of modelling the functional mechanisms of clinical AH on the basis of non clinical populations In short the time seems ripe to re-evaluate the continuum hypothesis and provide a forum to present alternative perspectives on the functional pathways leading to AH in clinical and non clinical groups Such a forum is also timely in view of the renewed interest in AH in other non schizophrenic clinical groups again examining similarities and differences between such groups Preliminary studies for instance have shown that AH in certain clinical populations e.g. bipolar disorder borderline personality disorder dissociative disorder share similar phenomenological features with AH in schizophrenia However the implications of such findings are not fully understood and studies have not adequately examined potential differences between AH in these groups. The goal of this Frontiers Research Topic therefore is to take the opportunity to bring together research exploring differences and similarities in mechanisms of AH in clinical and non clinical groups and to stimulate the development of new explanatory models which explicitly link the phenomenological characteristics of AH with underlying mechanisms. American
