

The first aircraft was a simple glider, built by the Italian inventor, Leonardo da Vinci. It was a large, flat, rectangular piece of wood, with a long, thin tail. It was designed to be thrown into the air, and then to glide forward, like a winged man. Da Vinci's glider was never flown, but it was a brilliant idea. It was the first step towards the invention of the airplane.

In 1783, the French inventors, the Montgolfier brothers, made the first manned flight. They used a large, paper balloon, filled with hot air. They carried a basket with two people in it, and they floated up into the air. This was a great achievement, but it was not an airplane. It was a balloon.

The first airplane was built by the American inventors, the Wright brothers. They were two men, Orville and Wilbur, who lived in Ohio. They were interested in flying, and they spent a lot of time studying the birds. They wanted to know how the birds did it, and they wanted to make a machine that could do the same thing. They built a glider, and they flew it in 1903. It was a small, simple machine, but it was the first airplane that could fly on its own, without a person in it.

The Wright brothers' airplane was a great success. It was the first step towards the invention of the modern airplane. It was a simple machine, but it was a brilliant idea. It was the first step towards the invention of the airplane.
