The family Evelyn Everett-Green, 1894 Refining Expertise Gwen Ottinger, 2013-03-04 An intriguing and impressive account of corporate social responsibility and neoliberalism writ large on the ground in action in chemical plant communities in Louisiana Ottinger effectively illustrates how in complex culturally saturated ways corporate commitment to responsible care has created critical challenges for environmental activism and justice Kim Fortun Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute Residents of a small Louisiana town were sure that the oil refinery next door was making them sick As part of a campaign demanding relocation away from the refinery they collected scientific data to prove it Their campaign ended with a settlement agreement that addressed many of their grievances but not concerns about their health Yet instead of continuing to collect data residents began to let refinery scientists assertions that their operations did not harm them stand without challenge What makes a community move so suddenly from actively challenging to apparently accepting experts authority Refining Expertise argues that the answer rests in the way that refinery scientists and engineers defined themselves as experts Rather than claiming to be infallible they began to portray themselves as responsible This work drives home the need for both activists and politically engaged scholars to reconfigure their own activities in response in order to advance community health and robust scientific knowledge about it Gwen Ottinger is Assistant Professor in Interdisciplinary Arts and Sciences at the University of Washington Bothell where she teaches in the Science Technology Society and Environmental Studies majors She is co editor of Technoscience and Environmental Justice Expert Cultures in a Grassroots Movement
