Studies of Wound-induced Phenylpropanoid Metabolism in Fresh-cut Romaine Lettuce and Its Modification by Heat Shock Reinaldo Ismael Campos,2001 Biological Communities Respond to Multiple Human-Induced Aquatic Environment Change Marina Manca,Roberta Piscia,2020-05-28

Perturbations linked to the direct and indirect impacts of human activities during the Anthropocene affect the structure and functioning of aquatic ecosystems to varying degrees Some perturbations involve stress to aquatic life including soil and water acidification soil erosion loss of base cations release of trace metals organic compounds and application of essential nutrients capable of stimulating primary productivity Superimposed onto these changes climate warming impacts aquatic environments via altering species metabolic processes and by modifying food web interactions The interaction stressors is difficult to predict because of the differential response of species and taxonomic groups interacting additively synergistically or antagonistically Whenever different trophic levels respond differently to climate warming food webs are restructured yet the consequences of warming induced changes for the food web structure and long term population dynamics of different trophic levels remain poorly understood Such changes are crucial in lakes where food web production is mainly due to ectotherms which are highly sensitive to changes in their surrounding environment Due to its remarkable physical inertia including thermal stability global warming also has a profound effect on groundwater ecosystems Combining contemporary and palaeo data is essential to understand the degree to which mechanisms of stressors impact on lake biological communities and lake ecosystem functioning The degree to which alterations can affect aquatic ecosystem structure and functioning also requires functional diversity to be addressed at the molecular level to reconstruct the role different species play in the transfer of material and energy through the food web In this issue we present examples of the impact of different stressors and their interaction on aquatic ecosystems providing long term metabolic molecular and paleolimnological analyses

Legume Nitrogen Fixation in a Changing Environment Saad Sulieman,Lam-Son Phan Tran,2015-04-24 The world population will grow more rapidly during the few coming years This must be accompanied by a parallel increase in the agricultural production to secure adequate food Sustainability considerations mandate that alternatives to chemical nitrogen fertilizers must be urgently sought Biological nitrogen N<sub>2</sub> fixation a microbiological process which converts atmospheric N<sub>2</sub> into a plant usable form offers this alternative Among these renewable sources N<sub>2</sub> fixing legumes offer an economically attractive and ecologically sound means of reducing external inputs and improving internal resources Environmental factors such as drought elevated temperature salinity soil acidity and rising CO<sub>2</sub> are known to dramatically affect the symbiotic process and thus play a part in determining the actual amount of nitrogen fixed by a given legume in the field Understanding how nodule N<sub>2</sub> fixation responds to the environment is crucial for improving legume production and maintaining sustainability in the context of global change In this thoughtful and provocative new Brief we provide critical information on how current and projected future changes in the environment will affect legume growth and their symbiotic N<sub>2</sub> fixing capabilities Each section reviews the main drivers of environmental change on the legume performance that include drought elevated temperature salinity and rising CO<sub>2</sub> and soil acidity Importantly we discuss the molecular approaches to the analysis of the stress response in legumes and the possible biotechnological strategies to overcome their detrimental effects

Human Milk and Lactation Maria Lorella Gianni, 2020-05-28 Human milk is uniquely tailored to meet infants specific nutritional requirements However it is more than just milk This dynamic and bioactive fluid allows mother infant signalling over lactation guiding the infant in the developmental and physiological processes It exerts protection and life long biological effects playing a crucial role in promoting healthy growth and optimal cognitive development The latest scientific advances have provided insight into different components of human milk and their dynamic changes over time However the complexity of human milk composition and the synergistic mechanisms responsible for its beneficial health effects have not yet been unravelled Filling this knowledge gap will shed light on the biology of the developing infant and will contribute to the optimization of infant feeding particularly that of the most vulnerable infants Greater understanding of human milk will also help in elucidating the best strategies for its storage and handling The increasing knowledge on human milk s bioactive compounds together with the rapidly advancing technological achievements will greatly enhance their use as prophylactic or therapeutic agents The current Special Issue aims to welcome original works and literature reviews further exploring the complexity of human milk composition the mechanisms underlying the beneficial effects associated with breastfeeding and the factors and determinants involved in lactation including its promotion and support
