Asian Economic Tigers A Philippine Comparison:

Asian Economic Tigers Antonio T. Medina, 1996 This book makes meaningful and startling comparisons between the four tiger economies in Asia Hong Kong South Korea Taiwan and Singapore and the Philippines The book reflects a fourteen year study and looks into the demographics land areas population densities and other social data that sometimes make for what now contributes to the composition of the human misery index The figures presented in this study will shatter much of the established knowledge about these countries The book also explores the conventional economic data of the five countries pinpointing differences and commonalities Focus points include the size of income per head their GNPs and their growth rates during the transforming period how these were financed internally and externally their governments role and the impacts upon their costs of living The study then concentrates on the main engine of growth in these economies the foreign trade sector The author highlights each countries foreign trade in terms of nature composition direction restructuring terms of trade and exchange rates The study brings to light the history of each country its peculiarities the policies undertaken to arrive where it is today its present state and where each country may go from here The measures adopted in this study are in turn placed upon the Philippine scenario of those times The Philippine Economy A. M. Balisacan, Hal Hill, 2003 An examination of all major facets of the Philippine economy and development policy this title looks to the past and to the future using approaches that are descriptive analytical interpretive and comparative It assesses trends since the 1980s identifies major policy issues and provides a balance sheet of achievements and deficiencies

Corporate Governance in Asia A Comparative Perspective OECD, 2001-08-01 Poor corporate governance was identified as one of the root causes of the recent Asian financial crisis The absence of effective disciplines on corporate managers coupled with complicated and opaque relationships between corporations their owners Comparative Criminology in Asia Jianhong Liu, Max Travers, Lennon Y.C. Chang, 2017-07-15 This edited volume presents the diversity of comparative criminology research in Asia and the complex theoretical and methodological issues involved in conducting comparative research With contributors both from the West and the East exploring these questions the Editors have created a balanced resource as well as set an agenda for future research The increasing pace of globalization means that researchers should be armed with an understanding of how criminal justice systems work across the world In the past comparative research largely compared Western countries to each other or involved researchers from a Western perspective examining an Asian country with models and theories developed in the West considered to have universal applications This work aims to correct that gap by providing a critical examination of comparative research presenting quantitative and qualitative research data and asking new questions that challenge prevailing research norms and provide an agenda for future research This work will be of interest for researchers across the field of Criminology particularly those with an interest in International and Comparative Research research on or about Asia and related disciplines such as Sociology Demography and Social Policy This fine collection that goes to the rich distinctiveness of Asian criminology The editors have brought together a wonderful collection of authors mainly from the region The distinctiveness of values and relational practices in Asia are recurrent themes that are well developed in this book and help us to make sense of patterns of crime and criminal justice in Asia John Braithwaite Australian National University

What theoretical methodological and practical issues must we confront in conducting cross cultural studies encompassing Western and Asian countries Comparative Criminology in Asia discusses these issues and presents exemplary comparative research The introductory chapter and the introduction to each part by the co editors are lucid and highly educational This collection must be required reading for every serious scholar and aspiring graduate student in Asian countries so that criminological and criminal justice studies will be brought to a much higher level of sophistication Setsuo Miyazawa UC Hastings

Can there be and should there be a distinctive Asian criminology What would this involve The answer depends on what one thinks of the universalistic explanatory claims of Western criminology Will these claims become self fulfilling as these societies add to colonial influences a more deliberate borrowing of criminal justice models and established ways of pursuing discipline of criminology Or will a more critical spirit prevail This welcome edited collection by Liu Travers and Chang provides an excellent starting point for reflecting on these and other questions Rather than attempting to provide descriptions of the variety of similarities and differences in this region though there are some fascinating case studies of these the focus is even more on exploring the theoretical approaches and methodologies used in comparing institutional and cultural differences by Asian criminologists and others David Nelken King's College London Criminologists can no longer ignore the impact of globalization on the pattern and amount of crime as we experienced recently nor can we ignore the global change of criminal justice policies to deal with crime There is therefore a desperate need to collect data on how crime and criminal justice are influenced by globalization across Asian countries On the other hand there are debates on the issue of culture specific vs pan culture theories of crime This collection addresses both issues in an interesting way Its publication is timely and welcome Chuen Jim Sheu National Taipei University

Tiger Economies Under Threat Shahid Yusuf, Kaoru Nabeshima, 2009-10-01 In recent years growth rates in the so called Tiger economies of Southeast Asia have been above the average not only for developing countries but for the world as a whole Yet they fall short of the economic growth experienced during 1975-95 The underlying worry for policy makers is that the decrease presages the beginning of a downward trend a worry that has been sharpened by the global recession But are the Tiger economies under threat And if so what are the causes and how can they be addressed This book employs a comparative analysis of the Southeast Asian Tiger economies centered on Malaysia to tackle these questions The findings presented will be of particular interest to policy makers academics business people and researchers

International Economics: A Heterodox Approach Hendrik Van den Berg, 2014-12-18 Now in its third edition this textbook covers all of the standard topics taught in undergraduate International Economics courses However the book is unique in that it presents the key orthodox neoclassical models of international trade and investment whilst supplementing them with a variety of heterodox approaches This pluralist approach is intended to give economics students a more realistic understanding of the international economy than standard textbooks can provide

Human Rights and Asian Values Ole Bruun, Michael Jacobsen, 2000 The Asian challenge to the universality of human rights has caused intense debate Here is a clear stand for universal rights theoretically and empirically through an analysis of social and political processes in Asia Asian values are linked to the struggle between authoritarian and democratic forces which both tend to convey stereotyped images of the West but with reversed meanings

Asia and the Middle-Income Trap Francis E. Hutchinson, Sanchita Basu Das, 2016-07-01 The term Middle Income Trap refers to countries which stagnate economically after reaching a certain level of per capita income on the basis of labour and capital intensive growth and are struggling to transition towards more skill intensive and technology driven development It has resonance for the increasing number of countries in Asia who have either languished in middle income status for extended periods of time or are worried about growth slow downs This book sets out the conceptual underpinnings of the Middle Income Trap and explores the various ways it can be defined It also focuses on the debate surrounding the Middle Income Trap which questions the appropriate institutional and policy settings for middle income countries to enable them to continue past the easy phase of economic growth The book engages with this debate by investigating the role of institutions human capital and trade policy in helping countries increase their income levels and by highlighting factors which enable the shift to higher and qualitatively better growth It questions how the large emerging economies in Asia such as China Indonesia and India are currently grappling with the challenges of transitioning from labour intensive to technology and knowledge intensive production and discusses what can be learnt from the countries that have been able to escape the trap to attain high income status Providing a conceptual framework for the Middle Income Trap this book will be of interest to students and scholars of Asian Economics Comparative Economics and Asian Studies
