Taylor, 1979 This study analyzes the impact of Spanish rule on Indian peasant identity in the late colonial period by investigating three areas of social behavior Based on the criminal trial records and related documents from the regions of central Mexico and Oaxaca it attempts to discover how peasants conceived of their role under Spanish rule how they behaved under various kinds of street and how they felt about their Spanish overlords In examining the character of village uprisings typical relationships between killers and the people they killed and the drinking patterns of the late colonial period the author finds no warrant for the familiar picture of sullen depredation and despair Landed peasants of colonial Mexico drank moderately on the whole and mostly on ritual occasions they killed for personal and not political reasons Only when new Spanish encroachments threatened their lands and livelihoods did their grievances flare up in rebellion and these occasions were numerous but brief The author bolsters his conclusions with illuminating comparisons with other peasant societies times places and peoples to discover how the individual pleasures of consumption were shaped by social cultural economic and political forces Focusing on ingestible substances as a group which has not been done before in the scholarly literature the chapters in Substance and Seduction trace three key links between colonization and commodification First as substances that were taken into the bodies of both colonizers and colonized these foods and drugs participated in unexpected connections among sites of production and consumption racial and ethnic categories and free forced and enslaved labor regimes Second as commodities developed in the long transition from mercantile to modern capitalism each substance in some way drew its enduring power from its ability to seduce to stimulate bodies to alter minds to mark class social and ethnic boundaries and to generate wealth Finally as objects of scholarly inquiry each substance rewards interdisciplinary approaches that balance the considerations of pleasure and profit materiality and morality and culture and political economy
